WASHINGTON HUSKIES (0-1) vs.
INDIANA HOOSIERS (0-1)

Washington Looks to Overcome the Corso 'Jinx'

by Jim Daves

Watching last week's game at Ohio State from high atop the press box at Ohio Stadium, ESPN Gameday analyst Lee Corso was asked about his mastery of the Huskies during his tenure at Indiana.

The only previous meetings between the Hoosiers and the Huskies came during the 1976 and 1978 seasons with IU winning both games. Corso, who coached at Indiana from 1973 to 1982, managed to beat Washington 20-13 in Seattle and 14-7 two seasons later in Bloomington.

"Don James used to say I was his jinx," Corso said with a laugh. "I beat him twice when he was at Washington and I also beat him when he was at Kent State."

Jinx indeed. Both times the Huskies were the favorites against the Hoosiers only to fall victim to an upset thanks in part to sloppy play and poor execution.

The circumstance between this year's renewal of the series and the first meeting are fairly similar. That season the Hoosiers were heavy underdogs, having won just five games over their previous three seasons. They made their first trip to Seattle sporting a 10-game losing streak.

Indiana took advantage of a number of Husky miscues to pick up the win. Washington's list of sins included:

- A pass interference call at the Washington

Charles Frederick was all over the field against the Buckeyes, catching six passes, rushing once, and returning three punts.

one-yard line.

- A personal foul penalty allowing Indiana a second chance to convert an extra point after UW's Nesby Glasgow had blocked the first try.
- An off-side call that cost the Huskies a touchdown.
- Losing the ball on downs at the IU 34-yard line.

In addition to the Husky mistakes, the Hoosiers relied on the ground game to pick up the win. Mark Harkrader, a 5-7 freshman who was pressed into service due to injuries, darted for 76 yards on 18 carries.

The two teams combined to complete just nine of 28 passes on the day for 88 yards. Husky signalcaller Warren Moon completed five of 17 attempts for 59 yards while constantly being harassed by Indiana's blitzing scheme.

In the rematch two years later, the same themes were repeated. The Huskies managed 402 total yards to just 238 by the Hoosiers. The Indiana passing game was an afterthought. That day saw the Hoosiers fail to complete a pass in three attempts.

It was the turnovers that did in the Huskies. Washington threw three interceptions and fumbled the ball away once. The Huskies also missed a pair of field goals to waste a 155-yard rushing performance by Joe Steele.

A quarter of a century later, the third game between the Huskies and Hoosiers finds Washington the favorite trying for its first win in the series and hoping to avoid the sloppy play that plagued James' teams in their matchup with Indiana.

The Huskies will have plenty of motivation to show improvement after watching the film of last week-end's lopsided 28-9 loss at Ohio State. The hopes of upsetting the defending national champions were quickly dashed when the Buckeyes rolled to a 21-0 halftime lead.

With the intimidating crowd on their side this week, the Huskies are hoping to get their offensive game into high gear after suffering a tough night trying to run the ball against a four-man Ohio State front that held UW to just seven net rushing yards.

Senior quarterback Cody Pickett managed to throw for 255 yards, completing 26 of 49 attempts, but spent a good part of the game running away from Buckeye pass rushers. He still had the time to connect with All-American wide receiver Reggie Williams 10 times for 107 yards. That proved to be the fourth most catches ever caught by Williams in a game and gave him a strong start to topple the 100-reception mark this season.

Despite being on the field for almost 32 minutes, the Husky defense was admirable in allowing the Huskies to have some hope in the second half. They only gave up 108 yards during the final 30 minutes and held the Buckeyes' strong running game to just 3.3 yards per carry during the contest.

While the Huskies hope to get their running game on track, the Hoosiers are seeking to do just the opposite. Last Saturday Connecticut became the 12th consecutive team to produce a 100-yard rusher against the Hoosiers.

The east coach Huskies rushed for 200 yards and added 222 passing in the inaugural game in UConn's new Rentschler Field.

Uncharacteristically, fumbles plagued Indiana in the loss. The Hoosiers lost just eight tackles in 12 games last season but coughed up the ball four times against Connecticut, losing three of them.

An Indiana native, Terry Johnson tallied two sacks in the season-opener at Ohio State.

While UW was hoping to make first-year coach Keith Gilbertson's Husky debut a success, Indiana fans had similar hopes for junior quarterback Matt Lovechio, a transfer from Notre Dame. Instead, the junior signalcaller completed just 13 of 29 passes and was sacked five times.

Last season, after a tough opening loss at Michigan to start the season, the Huskies did not make great strides while piling up three consecutive non-conference wins before the start of Pac-10 play. With the Hoosiers, followed by a bye and then a home game with Idaho ahead over the next three weeks, Washington cannot afford to make that same error this season if it hopes to be a contender for the conference title.

Corso, who predicts Washington will win the Pac-10 title this year, one doesn't think this UW team will do that.

"I was impressed that they kept fighting when they got down 14-0," he said last week as the clock ticked off the final minutes of the game. "A lot of other teams would have quit and they didn't. They'll be all right. I'm sticking with my pick."

Husky fans just hope that it is not one more jinx from the former Hoosier.

Reggie Williams opened his 2003 season with a 10-catch performance at Ohio State.

Sonny's SCOOP & STATS

with Husky Great Sonny Sixkiller

Pac-10 Double Dip: Keith Gilbertson is the first coach in Husky history to come to Washington after having been head man at another Pac-10 school. In fact, it's relatively rare for a coach to have served in that capacity at more than one Pac-10 institution. Recently, Bruce Snyder (California and Arizona State), Dennis Erickson (Washington State at Oregon State) and Larry Smith (Arizona and USC) have done it. Earlier examples include Tommy Prothro (Oregon State and UCLA) and Washington's own Leonard "Stub" Allison, who coached one season at the UW (1920) before eventually spending 10 seasons as Cal head coach (1935-44).

Pickett Returns With Record: Last season, then-junior Cody Pickett smashed the Pac-10's single-season passing yards record with 4,458. The last time that a reigning Pac-10 record-holder in season passing yards returned for an additional season with the record in hand was 1994, when USC's Rob Johnson came back for a senior season after throwing for 3,630 yards in 1993, breaking a record held at that time by Drew Bledsoe (WSU, 1992). Cougar QB Ryan Leaf, whose record Pickett broke, also set the record as a junior, but didn't return for his senior season. Incidentally, no Pac-10 QB has led the league in passing in back-to-back seasons (yards per game) since Stanford's Steve Stenstrom did it in 1993 and 1994.

How Good Is Reggie?: Receiver Reggie Williams, a first-team All-Pac-10 selection and a consensus first-team All-America in 2002, had, statistically, the best two-year run in Pac-10 receiving history. In 2002, Williams' 94 receptions were the third-most in Pac-10 history and his 1,454 yards were second on the all-time conference list. In his first two years, Williams caught 149 balls for 2,427 yards and 14 touchdowns. No receiver in Pac-10 history has ever posted that many receiving yards over a two-year span, and the only two players with that many receptions over two seasons — Arizona's Dennis Northcutt and Arizona's Bobby Wade — both did it during their junior and senior seasons, as did USC's Keyshawn Johnson, who had one fewer reception than Williams. Incidentally, Williams would need 94 receptions and 1,556 more receiving yards to reach the Pac-10 records of 248 and 4,047 yards, both held by Stanford's Troy Walters (1996-99).

Huskies vs. Big Ten: Washington holds a 39-38-1 record all-time vs. Big Ten opponents, a record that includes an 0-2 mark against Penn State, though the Lions were not members of the Big Ten at the time of their games against the UW. Aside from regular season games vs. Michigan each of the last two years, the Huskies' most recent action against Big Ten teams has come primarily in bowl games and in a series of games vs. Ohio State during the mid-1990s. The Huskies have played Big Ten teams seven times in bowl games since 1990: Iowa in the 1990 Rose Bowl, Michigan in the 1992 and 1993 Rose Bowls, Iowa in the 1995 Sun Bowl, Michigan State in the 1997 Aloha Bowl, Purdue in the 2001 Rose Bowl and Purdue in the 2002 Sun Bowl. The Huskies went 4-3 in those games. Washington is 7-7 against Big Ten teams since 1990.

by Noah Cohan

He sat, sidelined by injury for six games, unable to help his team.

He watched, powerless to prevent the Washington Huskies from a three-game losing streak that threatened the program's streak of 25 consecutive winning seasons.

He celebrated, jubilant at the team's three-game win streak to complete the coveted "Northwest Championship," yet felt unfulfilled at missing the action on the field.

For a player fast enough to compete at the elite levels of collegiate track, and reliable enough to be called "Roc," sitting out the second half of the 2002 Husky football season after suffering a shoulder injury against Arizona was an exercise in patience and frustration. Healthy again, however, senior cornerback Roc Alexander vows to channel that frustration into excellence on the gridiron in 2003.

"I am going to come back with a lot of fire and enthusiasm," he says. "It was really hard for me to watch, to sit there and see everybody play, to see Derrick Johnson and Nate Robinson get all those interceptions. I always wanted to help the team out, to do what I could. It was difficult, with the Northwest Championship and all, to sit and watch the whole team play without me."

Adversity, though, is nothing new to the three-time Husky letterman, both on and off the football field.

Growing up in Colorado Springs, Colo., Alexander was given the nickname "Roc" by his grandfather, who had difficulty pronouncing his given name, Narond. As the man of the house in a single-parent home headed by his mother, the moniker was a perfect fit for the reliable Alexander.

Inspired by an uncle to utilize his work ethic and athletic talents on the football field, Alexander soon became a rock on the gridiron as well. An all-state running back and standout linebacker at Wasson High School in Colorado Springs, Alexander led the Thunderbirds to the state playoffs, and before long was receiving recruitment letters from universities across the country.

Soon, he was headed for Washington, but the transition from high school to college football was not without adversity of its own, as Alexander learned that he would be switching positions in Seattle.

"It was very difficult for me to come in and play cornerback at the UW. I never played cornerback in high school at all. I played linebacker; I was the smallest linebacker in the conference," he says, laughing. "I was very inexperienced as a cornerback, but coach Chuck Heater helped me out with that. My uncle played cornerback in college, too, so it was a good deal for me, to be in his shoes again, to try and play like him."

Difficult as the transition may have been, the hard-hitting Alexander made the necessary adjustments during his freshman season, capping the year with two key defensive plays in the Huskies' 34-24 Rose Bowl win over Purdue. During the off-season, Alexander prepared himself for his first start, which would come at Husky Stadium in the season-opener against Michigan, a nationally-televised game in which he would forever make his name known to Husky fans.

With the Wolverines leading the Huskies 12-6 in the fourth quarter, Michigan lined up for a field goal that would have put the visitors up nine points with under 10 minutes to play. The kick, Alexander seeks to continue the aggressive style of play on defense that earned the Huskies nine interceptions in their final three games of 2002.

"I am going to come back with a lot of fire and enthusiasm. It was really hard for me to watch, to sit there and see everybody play..."

blocked by Husky senior cornerback Omare Lowe, began bouncing towards the sideline. Suddenly, Alexander — who holds the eighth fastest 100-meter time in UW history — was presented with the perfect opportunity to display his track-honed speed.

“It was a great game, a defensive game,” remembers Alexander. “Then Omare blocked the field goal, and it was surprising to see the ball bouncing my way. My first thought was, ‘Pick it up and run, see if you can score a touchdown.’ I didn’t really have any other thoughts, I just picked it up and ran.”

By the time he was done running, Alexander had sprinted 77 yards into the end zone, handing the Huskies their first lead of the game with 9:11 left in the fourth quarter. After the Huskies went on to win the game, the next day’s headlines read, fittingly, “Huskies dial 9:11 for big win”.

“It was my biggest moment ever,” he says. “It was my first touchdown ever at Husky Stadium, but it didn’t really sink in until the next day. I was like, ‘Wow, I just scored at Husky Stadium, and against Michigan at that.’ It gave me a lot of confidence.”

Alexander, who also had his first career interception in the game against the Wolverines, did not finish displaying his world-class speed with that moment. Against Idaho the next week, he returned a kick-off 95 yards for a score, becoming just the eighth player in UW history to score multiple special-teams touchdowns in the same season.

The sophomore finished the season tied for third in UW history with 11 pass defenses, and boasted three of the top-25 longest kick returns in UW history. Alexander’s kick return average of 29.2 yards was tops in the Pac-10, and sixth in the nation.

Though he did not return kicks in 2002, Alexander isn’t shy about professing his desire to do so again in his final season in the purple and gold.

“I love kickoff returning,” he says. “I like having the ball in my hands. I did it in spring ball this year and I felt good about it. I am going to do what I did my sophomore year, go out there, have the ball in my hands and make plays.”

As exciting as the prospect of having Alexander on special teams has to be for Husky fans, his return to the defensive backfield is perhaps even more tantalizing. Not only will he add his tremendous physical abilities to the Washington secondary, but the senior also brings a renewed respect for the game and his position.

“My mentality is that it’s really hard to play cornerback,” he explains. “You’re going to get scored on sometimes but you have to go out there and just sweat it off, forget it, and play hard again. Even though I’m a little guy, I try to hit as hard as I can. That’s important. You can’t be a soft hitter, not if you play at the University of Washington.”

As one of three elder statesmen in the UW secondary — along with fourth-year players Chris Massey and Derrick Johnson — Alexander knows he will have to do more than merely make plays.

“I am going to take people under my wing,” he says. “We’ve got a lot of younger players that will make a big impact, so I have got to be a good leader out there. It is up to me to keep everything going. I have a lot of enthusiasm for this team. I’m going to go out there and play hard, and hopefully they will follow me.”

Given the perseverance and commitment to excellence that Alexander has shown in rebounding from last season’s injury, Husky fans can only hope that the rest of the Huskies do follow in his footsteps, and become like a “Roc.”

One of three fourth-year defensive backs, Alexander will be a valuable mentor for the UW’s younger players.

Keith Gilbertson

A well-respected coach in the Pacific Northwest for more than 20 years, Keith Gilbertson was named the head football coach at Washington on July 29. The Husky job is Gilbertson's third stint as a head college coach.

The 2003 season will be the ninth year of coaching at Washington for Gilbertson. He is currently in his third term of service with the Husky program. He was a graduate assistant coach in 1975, an assistant coach from 1989-91 and again from 1999-2002.

Gilbertson becomes the 24th coach in the program's history. At age 55, he is the oldest individual to be named Washington's head coach. Gilbertson replaces Rick Neuheisel, who was terminated on June 12 after guiding the Huskies to a 33-16 record over the past four seasons.

Gilbertson's previous head coaching experience includes stints at Idaho (1986-88) and California (1992-95). He has a combined record of 48-35 at those two schools over seven seasons.

Gilbertson has been the Huskies' offensive coordinator the last three seasons. He was also a graduate assistant coach at the UW in 1976, as offensive line coach in 1998-90 and as the offensive coordinator in the national championship season of 1991. In 1999, he returned to Washington as assistant head coach and tight ends coach before being named offensive coordinator prior to the 2000 season.

In his two terms as the UW's offensive coordinator, Gilbertson built a reputation for varied and potent offenses. Gilbertson was instrumental in developing Washington's offense into one of the most explosive in the nation between 1989 and 1991. He was the Huskies' offensive line coach his first two seasons and took over as the offensive coordinator in 1991 when Washington won the national championship. The 1991 Washington team led the Pac-10 in total offense, rushing offense and scoring offense, relying on a balanced attack

In 2002, that offense was the most potent passing attack ever seen not only at Washington, but in the Pac-10. Junior quarterback Cody Pickett smashed the Pac-10 record for single-season passing yardage and completions while the UW threw for 4,501 yards as a team, breaking the old Pac-10 record by 712 yards.

In 2001, with a sophomore Pickett taking over the signalcalling, the Husky offense was second in the Pac-10 in passing, averaging 279.5 yards per game. A year earlier, behind senior quarterback Marques Tuiasosopo, UW's option-oriented rushing attack led the Pac-10 and was 16th nationally. The Huskies' ability to come from behind in the fourth quarter helped UW to the Pac-10 title and the 2001 Rose Bowl Championship.

Gilbertson began his coaching career as a graduate assistant at Idaho State (1971-74) and earned a degree in education from Western Washington, where he was a grad assistant in 1975.

After serving the 1976 season as a grad assistant at Washington for Don James, he was the offensive coordinator at Utah State from 1977 to 1981. In 1982 he joined Dennis Erickson's staff at Idaho for one season as the offensive coordinator. The Vandals recorded an 8-

Gilbertson's offense has turned quarterback Cody Pickett into one of the nation's top passers.

3 regular-season record and advanced to the quarterfinals of the NCAA I-AA playoffs.

For three seasons, from 1983-85, he coached in the USFL for the Los Angeles Express. He returned to Idaho in 1985 as the offensive coordinator and helped the Vandals to a 9-2 regular-season record and another trip to the NCAA playoffs. The following season he took over as Idaho's head coach when Erickson was named head coach at Washington State.

Gilbertson led the Vandals to an 11-2 record in 1988, the best mark in school history. That year Idaho advanced to the NCAA Division I-AA semifinals and he was named the Big Sky Conference coach of the year. His 1987 and 1988 teams both won the Big Sky championships. His .757 career winning percentage is still the highest in Idaho history.

His three Vandal teams produced a combined record of 28-9 and advanced to the I-AA playoffs all three seasons. When he left Idaho his winning percentage (.757) ranked as the second best mark in the history of the Big Sky Conference. His winning percentage of .826 in conference games (19-4) was the best in league history.

After working on James' staff at Washington from 1989-91, Gilbertson left the Huskies following the team's 1991 national championship season to take over as the head coach at California. His four-year stint as the Golden Bears' coach was highlighted by the 1993 team that posted a 9-4 record and defeated Iowa 37-3 in the Alamo Bowl. That win stands as California's last bowl victory. Gilbertson was also the last Cal coach to pin a loss on arch rival Stanford until 2002.

Following his head coaching tenure at California, Gilbertson worked as an assistant coach for the Seattle Seahawks on Erickson's staff for three seasons. In 1996 he served as a defensive specialist and took over as the tight ends coach for the 1997 and 1998 seasons.

Gilbertson grew up in Snohomish, Wash., where his father, Keith, Sr., has been a long-time prep coach. He attended Snohomish High School before going on to play football at Central Washington in 1967, Columbia Basin Junior College in 1968, and Hawaii from 1969-70.

He later returned to earn his bachelor's degree in social sciences from Central Washington in 1971. Gilbertson earned a degree in education from Western Washington in 1974.

Gilbertson was born in Snohomish on May 15, 1948, he attended Snohomish High School. He and his wife, Barbara, were married in 1988 and have two children, Kristin and David. Gilbertson also has an adult daughter, Ann, who resides in Los Angeles.

Gilbertson has been flexible as a coordinator, installing an option offense in 1999 to feature the talents of quarterback Marques Tuiasosopo.

Dr. Lee L. Huntsman was appointed interim president of the UW on Nov. 4, 2002.

Huntsman has served as UW provost and vice president for academic affairs since March 1997. As the University's chief academic and budgetary officer, he has provided leadership in educational and curriculum development, formulation and allocation of capital and operating budgets, academic and administrative personnel matters, allocation of space, long-range strategic planning, and management of the University's research programs. The provost serves as deputy to the UW president and provides advice and assistance to the president, the deans and the faculty in these matters.

Huntsman, who joined the UW faculty in 1968, holds the faculty appointment of professor of bioengineering. He served as director of the Center for Bioengineering (now Department of Bioengineering) from 1980 to 1996. He also served as associate dean for scientific affairs in the School of Medicine from 1993 to 1996, when he became acting provost. His laboratory's research, which received continuous funding from the National Institutes of Health, applied principles of engineering to biology and medicine in the measurement and regulation of the cardiovascular system.

He received a bachelor of science degree in electrical engineering from Stanford University in 1963 and a Ph.D. in biomedical engineering from the University of Pennsylvania in 1968. Huntsman is a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the American Institute of Medical and Biological Engineering.

DIRECTOR OF ATHLETICS BARBARA HEDGES

When it comes to recognition, Washington athletic director Barbara Hedges would prefer that the spotlight fall on Husky student-athletes. Still, it is hard not to acknowledge her accomplishments.

During the past decade, Washington's athletic teams have enjoyed unprecedented success. The Husky program is also recognized as a leader in gender equity, community service and outreach programs and Student-Athlete Support Services.

In 1999-2000 Hedges was named the NACDA/Continental Airlines Athletic Director of the Year for the NCAA Division I West Region. She was presented the Honda Award of Merit and the Seattle/King County Sports and Events Council named her their MVP of the Year Award Winner.

There is a chalkboard in Hedges' office filled with inspirational messages, quotations and philosophies provided by her staff and visitors. One of her passages reads, "Hope is not a strategy." It is very appropriate. The successes for Washington's athletic programs during Hedges' tenure that have earned her so many acknowledgements have been forged in hard work, planning and a commitment to excellence, not just wishful thinking.

Washington is currently in the second phase of its highly-successful "Campaign for the Student-Athlete" that has helped to generate several major capital improvements on the Montlake Campus. In November of 2000 the newly renovated Bank of America Arena at Hec Edmundson Pavilion opened to rave reviews. In addition to providing an elite competition venue for Washington's basketball, volleyball and gymnastics teams, as well as lockerrooms, training rooms, equipment rooms and new meeting rooms, the project also provided a home for the new $1 million Husky Hall of Fame that opened in the fall of 2002.

During September of 2001 Washington opened the $29 million Dempsey Indoor multi-purpose practice facility. With over 100,000 square feet of competition space, Washington's student-athletes have the nation's finest multi-purpose practice setting for year-round training purposes.

In 2000, Hedges' relationship with the NFL's Seattle Seahawks resulted in a $1 million gift towards the installation of a FieldTurf playing surface in Husky Stadium. Washington became just the second major college football program in the nation to play on the surface that has won rave reviews from players on both the collegiate and professional levels, and was later installed on a practice field adjacent to the stadium.

Still to come are stadium projects for the new soccer and baseball fields and a $20 million renovation of the Conibear Shellhouse, which also serves as the home for the Total Student-Athlete program.

It seems that Hedges' workload is never ending, but that is a reflection of her commitment to making the Washington program one of the best in the nation. The results have been proven on the field of competition.

In just her first year on the job, in 1991, the Husky football team posted a perfect 12-0 season by defeating Michigan in the Rose Bowl and winning the national championship.

The Husky women's rowing team has won three NCAA team titles, while the UW softball team has reached the College World Series seven of the last 10 years.

Under Hedges' direction the Husky golf, baseball and tennis programs have emerged on the national scene. Men's soccer, women's rowing and softball have all been ranked No. 1 in the nation during the past few years.

Hedges' efforts in gender equity have made Washington one of the national leaders in providing equal opportunities for both male and female student-athletes. In December of 1997, The Chronicle of Higher Education cited Washington as "the only Division I-A institution with an undergraduate enrollment that was at least 50 percent female to have achieved substantial proportionality in both scholarships and participation."

Hedges is similarly committed to a high level of academic achievement among Washington's student-athlete population. To this end, she has instituted a number of progressive measures — such as the Total Student-Athlete program devoted to leadership training, mentor programs and career nights — that she hopes will aid the student-athletes in more easily achieving all their non-athletic goals. The University's "UWired" program is unique in the nation, allowing student-athletes access to laptop computers to stay in touch with their classes while on the road.

Prior to her arrival at Washington in 1991, Hedges spent 17 years as an associate athletic director at the University of Southern California, where she was promoted to Senior Associate Director of Athletics in 1989.

Hedges' commitment to college athletics makes her a familiar name on the national scene. Hedges has served as president of the Council of Collegiate Women Athletic Administrators and the Western Collegiate Athletic Association and also as president of the Division I-A Women's Athletic Administrators. She chaired the NCAA Women's Tennis Committee for eight years and the NCAA Division I Men's and Women's Tennis Committee in 1988. She was one of a three-member NCAA Special Television Committee to negotiate the NCAA rights for all sports except football and basketball with ESPN, ABC, CBS and international television.

In 1996-97 she was the first woman to serve as president of the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics and in 1998 she was named the first woman to the Board of Directors for the National Football Foundation. She is also on the Board of Directors of the Division I-A Athletic Directors' Association, and has served previously with the Blue Ribbon Task Force for College Football USA, and the NCAA Working Group to study basketball issues. She is currently the chair of the Pac-10 Men's Basketball Officiating Committee, the Pac-10 Legislative Committee, and serves on the Pac-10 Athletic Directors' Television Committee. She is a member of the NCAA Championships and Competition Cabinet and serves on the regional selection committee for the College Football Hall of Fame.

She has also served as tournament director for the 1995 NCAA Men's Final Four, the 1993 NCAA Men's Basketball West Regional and the 1984 West Regional Women's Basketball Championship. Hedges was instrumental in bringing the 1992 Division I Women's Final Four to Los Angeles. At USC, she was administratively responsible for the 1988 NCAA Division I Men's Golf Championship and the 1990 Division I Men's Tennis Championship.

Before going to USC in 1973, Hedges coached gymnastics and taught physical education at the University of Arizona. During her five years with the Wildcats, Hedges coached her team to three conference championships and assisted in integrating women's athletic programs into the University's athletic structure. Prior to arriving at Arizona, Hedges coached gymnastics and taught physical education at high schools in Wyoming and Colorado.

Hedges received her bachelor's degree in physical education from Arizona State University in 1963, where she was honored as the University's outstanding physical education major while also being named to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities. She received her master's from the University of Arizona in 1971.

Hedges was born August 23, 1937, in Glendale, Arizona. She and her husband, John, have two grown children, Mark and Gregg.

MOVING ON

by Mason Kelley

Nov. 11, 2002.

Just one day after finishing the regular season with a resounding 5-0 win over 15th-ranked USC, Washington's women's soccer players and coaches gathered to await the selections for the 2002 NCAA Women's College Cup.

Their names were never called.

Junior Jaime Carstensen and her fellow underclassmen watched as the team's seniors came to grips with the idea that their seasons, and college careers, were over. Now entering her fourth and final year at Washington, Carstensen refuses to suffer the same fate.

"It was one of the most disappointing days I can remember," says Carstensen, who started 15 games at center midfield in 2003. "It really hit hard. I don't want to be where they were. I don't think I could take that."

Carstensen has had her share of success in soccer, which she has played since the age of six. She says her parents put her in the sport as an outlet for what seemed to be an endless bundle of energy.

"I don't know why it was soccer," she says, thinking out loud. "They just wanted to find a way to keep me running around. I instantly loved it. It just came naturally."

Carstensen has devoted her life to the game she loves ever since. Such devotion required giving up weekends to play year-round, but resulted in the tiny bundle of energy blossoming into one of the top junior players in her home state of California.

Jaime Carstensen

By the time she graduated Santa Rosa's Ursuline High School in 2000, Carstensen had won three California state titles, including one with a 1999 Ursuline team that was ranked third in the country. The midfielder was named state Player of the Year in 1998 and was an All-America candidate in both 1998 and 1999.

Carstensen's run of success landed her a spot on the Region IV Olympic Development Team, a squad headed by Husky head coach Leslie Gallimore.

"I've known Leslie Gallimore since I was 14," Carstensen says. "I enjoyed her and Amy (Griffin), who was my first regional coach. I really liked their coaching style. I came up here on a recruiting trip, my senior year, in October and I loved it."

Carstensen was besieged with offers from other schools, but couldn't shake the positive feelings she had for Gallimore and Washington. As a freshman in 2000, Carstensen appeared in 17 games while helping the Huskies to an all-time UW best 18-3 record and a Pac-10 title. In her three years at Washington, the Huskies have won 40 games, a total unsurpassed by any other three-year span in UW history.

"I can't really see myself anywhere else," she says. "I think that I have just met the best people. We're so lucky here and my teammates are basically my best friends. We just genuinely care about each other. I love our team."

Despite a love for her team, Carstensen rid herself of the sour taste left in her mouth by last year's NCAA snub. Whenever her motivation wanes in the long offseason, Carstensen remembers the bitter end to last season, and all of the early morning workouts and grueling practices become worthwhile.

"I think after having such a disappointing season last year, we know what needs to be done," she says determinedly. "We know that every single game means everything. We lost some games we should have won last year. You can't take any game lightly."

A determined leader, Carstensen can only help this year's team. Coach Gallimore has referred to her central midfielder as having "a wicked shot with both feet," feet Carstensen plans on using to fill the nets in 2003.

"I like to shoot," she says. "The more shots you get, the more likely you are to score goals, so why not shoot? I'm going to look to shoot a lot this year."

If the rest of the Huskies can fall in line behind Carstensen and bring the kind of intensity and conviction she brings on a daily basis, then Washington is going to be tough to beat in the Pac-10.

"I want to be a key player on this team," Carstensen says. "I want people to look to me when we are down and have the faith that I can make a difference."

Sometime in November of 2003, the team will gather again to watch the NCAA Selection Show. With Carstensen's determination driving them forward, they are certain not to be left out.

HUSKY LEGENDS

RON HOLMES

A consensus All-American in 1984, Ron Holmes will long be remembered as one of the finest defensive linemen ever to wear the purple and gold.

Known as "The Sackmaster," Holmes piled up a remarkable 117 tackles in 1984, leading the Huskies to 11 wins and a 28-17 victory over Oklahoma in the 1985 Orange Bowl.

His dominance is reflected in the Husky record books, where Holmes ranks among the top-five all-time in tackles-for-loss in a game (5), season (21) and career (48); tackles-for-loss yards in a season (98); career tackles by a lineman (279); and quarterback sacks in a game (5), season (13) and career (27). His five-sack performance, against Navy in 1983, has been equaled, but never topped by any Husky before or since.

A first-round draft pick of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, Holmes played seven seasons in the NFL, and was inducted into the Husky Hall of Fame in 2001.

CORNER

SHARP

by Mason Kelley

On a crisp autumn afternoon, the Huskies take the field to battle Oregon State in the first of three games against Northwest teams. A hard-fought first quarter comes to a thrilling end for Washington when cornerback Derrick Johnson returns an interception 42 yards for a touchdown to put the Huskies ahead, 17-10.

On the Beavers' first possession of the second quarter, quarterback Derek Anderson takes the snap and begins his drop. Trapped inside his own 20-yard line and needing to make something happen, he sees his receiver break downfield.

He never sees Chris Massey.

The Husky cornerback lurks until the right moment, reading Anderson's eyes before stepping in front of the throw for the interception. By the time Anderson does see Massey, he is well on his way to the end zone to give UW a 24-10 lead that they would never relinquish, and an emotional lift that would help carry them to thrilling road wins against Oregon and Washington State.

Chris Massey

"It was just a crazy interception," says Massey, who played wide receiver in high school. "I took it off the quarterback's right arm and ... I was gone. I didn't have anybody else in my sight. I was going straight for the end zone."

Massey's never had much trouble finding the goal, it's just that the goal he seeks to score in now is a little bigger than the one he focused on as a youth.

"It was soccer that kept me out of football, because I started soccer so early," Massey says. "My parents didn't want me to get involved in football too early; they wanted me to wait until I had a little bit of meat on me."

Once he hit the eighth grade, Massey joined a Pop Warner league in his hometown of Moreno Valley, Calif. He enjoyed the game, but didn't intend to pursue it any further. The Huskies can thank some constructive peer pressure for helping produce their anchor on the corner.

Massey joined the team, using the speed and cutback skills he had learned in soccer to excel as a wide receiver. During his junior year at Valley View High School, colleges began to take interest, though not for his outstanding pass-catching ability. It was his quick feet, again perfected through years of soccer training, that caught the eye of college scouts, who envisioned Massey turning on a dime to swat away passes as a lock-down cornerback.

Massey, though, wasn't so sure.

"I wanted to play receiver in college, but wasn't recruited much at that position," he says. "I had played a little bit of corner in high school, but I had no clue what I was doing. The scouts said they could see it in my hips and feet. I have really quick feet and they said I could be converted into a corner."

Massey was a key component of the Husky pass defense that allowed just 222 yards passing per game over the last half of the 2002 season.

While many teams vied for Massey's services, only one stood out.

"I wanted to get away from home and experience a new life," he says. "Seattle was the place for me to be. Coming up here to Washington, there is a lot of tradition. It is a big-time football program."

Massey red-shirted his freshman year but found himself starting in the Rose Bowl as a sophomore. He has enjoyed his time a corner, but confesses to every now and then having an itch to work out with the offense.

"Actually, this summer I was playing a little receiver during seven on seven and I was eating those guys up," Massey jokes. "It was fun to get out there and play another position."

While he may not get the chance to battle Reggie Williams and Charles Frederick for touchdowns, Massey's experience as a receiver gives him an advantage on defense.

"It definitely helps me out," he says. "I know what their actions are going to be, based on how they line up. Having played receiver, I can read where they open up and when they'll break."

Another aspect of Massey's game is his penchant for sacking the quarterback. Massey has perfected the corner blitz and loves his chance to score a big hit.

"On corner blitzes the quarterback is not really expecting it, so you get a couple of blind-side shots," he says. "Coming off the edge is fun."

During his career, Massey has returned both an interception and a blocked field goal for touchdowns, though he says that the interception was more meaningful. In that game, the Huskies made five interceptions, as the defensive backs came together as a unit.

"We had a couple of losses coming into the game but the DBs finally stepped up and made some plays," he says. "The whole team got into in and sparked us for a couple of games that led to the Northwest title."

A large part of Massey's success stems from the support of his parents, Walter and Avril, and his sister, Nicolle. Once they found his love for football, they nurtured it and now make it to every game they can.

"They have always been very supportive," Massey says. "They took me to NFL games and to a couple of Rose Bowls. I got to witness what Pac-10 football was all about."

Having his family in the stands gives Massey a little extra lift before each game.

Against Idaho in 2001, Massey returned a blocked field goal 69 yards for a touchdown.

"My family tries to come to almost every game," he says. "They live in California so they have to fly up every weekend, which obviously costs a lot of money. I really appreciate my family for doing that."

On the cusp of this, his final season at Washington, Massey has high hopes for 2003. A Pac-10 title is always the goal at Washington, and Massey would love to save his family money by traveling to see them in January, in the form of a trip to the Rose Bowl. He knows that this year's team has talent; it's simply a matter of playing hard for 60 minutes in every game.

"I want to make sure I am accountable on the field and make sure that everyone is accountable," he says. "There are only 11 people out on defense at one time. If just one person messes up, the other team could score a touchdown."

Despite his success, Massey still feels that he has much to prove. If he takes what he has learned from his days as a youth soccer star and a standout high school wide receiver, fans can expect to see replays of that crisp autumn afternoon a few more times this season.

After playing wide receiver in high school, Massey was recruited as a cornerback due to his quick feet, a talent he developed while playing youth soccer.

A Proud Tradition of Academic Excellence

Founded in 1861, the University of Washington is one of the foremost institutions of higher education in the nation, richly combining its research, instructional and public service missions.

Its internationally acclaimed faculty includes five Nobel Laureates and the winner of the 1990 National Book Award for Fiction. Washington is part of an elite group of research universities whose contributions to American life are unique because they generate the basic knowledge upon which practical innovations are based.

The UW student body on the Seattle campus totals about 37,000, with an undergraduate enrollment of approximately 26,800. The UW also has campuses in Bothell and Tacoma, designed primarily for upper division (junior and senior) undergraduates and master's level graduate programs. Total enrollment at these campuses is about 3,600.

For more than 30 years, the university has been among the country's top five institutions in the dollar value of federal research grants and contracts awarded to its faculty. In 2000, the most recent year for which that data has been collected, the UW ranked second. Total grant and contract activity for 2001 exceeded $700 million. More than 80 percent of the university's grant and contract funds come from federal agencies. Research contributes directly to the educational goals of graduate and professional students, as well as to those of undergraduates.

Instruction and research at Washington are supported by a library system that is one of the most extensive in the nation, consisting of five major units and 18 branches, as well as libraries at UW Tacoma and UW Bothell, together housing more than five million volumes. In addition to offering instruction in more than 100 academic disciplines, the university offers a spectrum of continuing education courses that advance technical and professional skills and provide opportunities for personal growth and enrichment.

Washington has 17 major schools and colleges: Architecture and Urban Planning, Arts and Sciences, Business Administration, Dentistry, Education, Engineering, Forest Resources, The Graduate School, The Information School, Law, Medicine, Nursing, Ocean and Fishery Sciences, Pharmacy, Public Affairs, Public Health and Community Medicine, and Social Work.

About 90 percent of the University's undergraduate students are state residents, although instructional programs draw students from every region of the country and overseas.

Most freshmen entering Washington are in the top third of their high school graduating classes. In 2001, the average incoming freshman boasted a 3.63 high school grade point average and an 1,159 SAT score.

Beyond its academic and service missions, the UW has a strong economic impact on Washington and the Pacific Northwest.

With about 20,000 employees, Washington is the second-largest employer in King County. Washington operates the University of Washington Medical Center and Harborview Medical Center, which annually provide more than 200,000 days of patient care and record more than 300,000 visits to their outpatient clinics.

Washington also plays a critical role in attracting new business to the region. It provides these, and established businesses, with a steady stream of well-educated graduates and with highly skilled faculty members who assist business and industry in a variety of ways.

The University of Washington in Seattle is located on 703 acres in the city's northeast residential area, a beautiful setting on the shore of Lake Washington and Portage Bay. The majestic Cascade Mountains can be seen to the east and the Olympics loom to the west, while the western view includes downtown Seattle and Lake Union. The combination of this spectacular setting with buildings in both neo-Gothic and modern styles gives the campus a distinctive aura.

University Compliance, the Pac-10, and the NCAA

by Rob Aronson

Compliance with University, Pac-10, NCAA, State and Federal regulations is a priority of the University's athletics program. As recently as 10 years ago, many athletics programs did not have a designated compliance director. Overall compliance supervision was left to the Faculty Athletics Representative (FAR).

The exponential increase in rules and interpretations by various regulatory bodies, along with the harsh consequences of the commission of major infractions, has resulted in a substantial increase in compliance efforts and compliance personnel. At UW, the compliance office is now staffed by Assistant Athletic Director for Compliance Dana Richardson, Compliance Coordinator Merlene Aitken, Eligibility Coordinator Jennifer Henderson — all lawyers — and Financial Aid Director MaryAnn Emery.

All entering student-athletes — frosh or transfer — must be certified as eligible. They must meet specified NCAA core-course GPA and SAT or ACT requirements. Issues such as those relating to disability, home schooling, and nonconforming high school courses must be resolved. When appropriate, NCAA non-qualifier determinations must be appealed. Then, the eligibility of all returning student-athletes (approx. 500) must be certified to the Pac-10 and NCAA. Continuing eligibility requirements include required number of credits per quarter and cumulative year-to-year totals, declaration of majors, and percentage of credits attained towards graduation in the student's major.

In addition, unless specifically permitted under NCAA regulations, student-athletes may not receive any "extra benefits," no matter how small. Generally, "extra benefits" include anything of value that is not available to non-athlete students. Therefore, student-athletes, coaches, staff, supporters, and the public generally must be educated concerning the nature of prohibited benefits, and all of those groups must be constantly monitored to ensure that NCAA rules are being followed.

The NCAA and Pac-10 Conference have equally complex rules regarding recruitment of prospective student-athletes, the provision of financial aid, amateurism, permissible hours, days and seasons of both voluntary and mandatory practices and weight training, nutrition and drug use, gambling, marketing, advertising, training table, and permissible academic assistance. Many of the rules on these myriad subjects are unclear, or even contradictory. The Pac-10 and NCAA therefore provide frequent interpretations of the rules.

The University's Compliance Team provides day-to-day guidance concerning the rules and the conduct they permit, require or prohibit. Compliance Team members respond to 40-50 requests for interpretations per week.

Finally, the number and complexity of the rules make it virtually impossible to avoid at least some minor infractions. Most infractions are discovered by the involved coaches, staff or students, but inquiries can also be initiated by the NCAA, Pac-10, or by competitors and members of the public. The University investigates all inquiries and allegations, whatever the source. If it determines that a violation has occurred, it files a self-report with the Pac-10, along with recommended penalties and remedial measures. The Pac-10 and NCAA then review the case and determine whether to accept the University's remedial measures or impose additional measures. Schools in the Pac-10 file between 20 and 50 infraction reports per year, the vast majority of which are accepted without additional measures.

In subsequent issues of Huskies Magazine, members of the Athletic Department compliance staff will discuss some of the above topics and issues in greater detail.

ROOM TO GROW

by C.J. Bowles

When asked what playing soccer for the University of Washington means to him, Danny Waltman hesitates. How can you summarize a three-year, life-changing experience in a few mere phrases?

He has fired through all of the previous questions in a confident fashion similar to the way in which he minds the net for the Husky men. This well as anyone? Surprising, yes, but soccer means so much to Waltman that he is always seeking ways to further develop his own game, while wringing even more enjoyment from the sport he loves.

The senior from Gig Harbor, Wash., remembers vividly his first time playing between the goalposts.

"When I was six, I always played forward," he recalls. "Nobody wanted to play goalie, so everyone took their turn. When it was my turn, we lost something like 14-0, but I loved it! I've been doing it ever since."

Waltman's passion for the position began to pay dividends during his high school career at Tacoma's Bellarmine Prep, where he began to build an impressive soccer resume. A four-time all-league honoree, Waltman led Bellarmine to four straight league titles with four consecutive undefeated regular seasons.

The modest Waltman admits to being surprised when colleges came calling, but didn't seriously consider the Huskies until visiting the campus and meeting the UW coaches and players.

"I never wanted to go to UW," he admits. "I'm from Gig Harbor, so I wanted to get as far away as possible. I never even considered the UW, but then I got a call. I came to check it out, and totally fell in love with this place. It has everything, and just felt right. This was the first place I looked at, and didn't even bother to look anywhere else."

Waltman considers the chance to play collegiately at Washington to be the greatest reward imaginable for his years of hard work.

"My biggest accomplishment was coming here," he says. "I never thought I'd be here. Twenty years of playing and working to improve all finally paid off."

The work has also paid off for the Huskies, for whom Waltman has started at keeper since the final three games of his sophomore season. That brief stretch included the team's first-round NCAA College Cup loss to Portland in 2001, a defeat that Waltman took personally.

"That was probably the worst day of my life," he says. "I had just gotten the starting spot. It's not like I lost the game, but I had another year, and those seniors didn't."

Waltman took it upon himself to make every game count in 2002, but even as he started 12 games and earned a goals-against-average of just 1.62 goals per game, the team couldn't seem to put the pieces together, finishing with a 6-10-3 record and missing the NCAA College Cup for the first time since 1994.

"Last year, everything that could have gone wrong went wrong," Waltman says. "It was like we were working against forces that were more powerful than us."

Although the season was a disappointment, for at least one game, the Huskies showed how good they potentially could be.

"The highlight of last year was beating UCLA," Waltman says. "They won the national championship, so that goes to show how good our team really was. Our record didn't reflect that as much, but we had the potential."

Now, with his senior season ready to kick off, Waltman is ready.

"I've seen everything that can happen over the past three years, so there won't be any surprises," he says.

Always looking towards the future, Waltman is beginning to ponder life after UW soccer.

"God-willing, I would love to play until I can't walk anymore, but if not, I'm majoring in business, so I'll probably do something in that field," he says.

Of course, Waltman hopes to put the future off as long as possible with a deep run into the NCAA College Cup, a chance to extend the precious little time he has left with his teammates and friends.

"I'm going to miss my teammates the most," he says. "It's like I have 26 brothers. Some of the guys who I played with who have now graduated, I look back at them and wish I had spent more time with them. I don't know if I'll ever find a group of friends that tight ever again."

It's been 16 years since Waltman first stepped between the pipes on a soccer field, but the senior has never stopped seeking a greater knowledge and understanding of soccer, and life — which for him are inextricably intertwined.

"They make a man out of you here at Washington," he says. "You find out what kind of man you really are and get pushed to the limits."

Even a talented, experienced player like Danny Waltman, ready to lead his team back to the NCAA College Cup, there's always room to grow.

one, though, has him speechless, and a long time passes before he finally looks up, smiling.

"It's a growing experience," he says.

A growing experience? From a man who has played soccer since he could walk, and certainly by now must know the game's ins and outs as

‘Atmospheric Aerosols’ May Be a Cooling Factor in Climatic Changes

Atmospheric aerosols — airborne particles that reflect the sun’s heat away from Earth and into space — are part of everyday life. They are in the haze of air pollution, in plumes of smoke from forest fires and in ash clouds from erupting volcanoes.

However, a new study says the cooling effect of man-made aerosols could throw a monkey wrench into the current understanding of climate change.

“It’s possible that the total forcing from human activity to date is small, or even negative. That’s unlikely but possible, and we should not rule it out at this point,” said Theodore Anderson, a UW research meteorologist.

Climate forcing results when an external factor imposes a change on the planet’s heat balance.

Aerosols produced by human activity can exert both positive and negative forcing, but it is believed that their overall effect is negative (positive forcing adds heat and tends to warm the climate; negative forcing removes heat and tends to cool the climate).

The particles reflect sunlight back into space and also modify the properties of clouds, causing them to reflect more sunlight back into space. These patchy effects add up to a global impact that tends to offset climate warming caused by human-produced greenhouse gases, such as carbon dioxide.

Despite extensive study, it is still highly uncertain just how big a factor the negative forcing of aerosols is in the overall climate-change picture. At issue is whether computer and mathematical models that use a variety of factors to gauge climate change have properly accounted for the uncertainty.

Anderson is lead author of a paper, published in Science magazine, arguing that climate modelers have failed to consider the full magnitude of potential forcing that has been found in aerosol research. Instead, the authors say, modelers have used only aerosol-forcing values that allow their models to reproduce the recorded global temperature increase, and have ignored values that do not fit the temperature record.

“That’s fine as a best-guess scenario, but what if the high-magnitude negative aerosol forcing values turn out to be correct?” Anderson asked. “That would mean current interpretations of 20th-century warming would be erroneous, and so projections of future climate change might be in error as well. We need to at least consider this possibility.”

He noted that if all climate forcing from outside factors so far has had a cumulative negative effect, then climate warming that already has occurred cannot be from human activity but rather must be the result of natural climate fluctuation. On the other hand, if the total forcing to date has been very small but still caused the observed warming, then the Earth’s climate might be much more sensitive to forced change than climate models currently indicate.

Improved knowledge of climate forcing could radically alter the current understanding of climate change, the authors say. That improved knowledge could be available in the near future from a new generation of aerosol-sensing satellites. A big step comes next year when the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the French space agency launch a satellite called CALIPSO, which will provide detailed maps of the atmosphere’s aerosol content. CALIPSO will fly in formation with other satellites measuring energy variations and other factors.

“We can expect surprises and breakthroughs in quantifying aerosol forcing, but we don’t know what to expect,” said Robert Charlson, a UW atmospheric chemist and a co-author of the paper in Science. “We will be in a position where we will be better able to disprove or support the climate models.”

The researchers do not contend that human-caused climate change isn’t a real danger. In fact, they make the opposite case.

The ability of aerosols to counteract greenhouse warming is limited, because the particles remain in the air for only a week or so, Anderson said, while greenhouse gases remain for a century or more. So while there currently might be a rough balance between the two, the greenhouse gases are accumulating and are sure to win out in the future, having a much larger long-term impact on climate.

It is critical to figure out how the Earth’s climate responds to positive forcing, Anderson said. One of the best ways to do that is to improve the knowledge of current climate forcing from human activities. Even with the arrival of new satellites, however, achieving this advance in knowledge will require strong commitment from the scientific community and funding agencies, he said. Coordinated global measurements are needed to properly interpret data from the satellites, and compiling that information into an improved global understanding will be a major challenge.

“We already know that we will have to seriously limit carbon dioxide emissions,” Charlson said. “But, until we do a better job quantifying the total forcing, we will not know how rapidly carbon dioxide controls need to be implemented, nor will we know how much climate change we can expect in spite of these controls.”

On the RISE

by Terra Romar

The history of Husky athletics is littered with outstanding accomplishments in sports such as football and crew, championship traditions with which for many years the Husky volleyball team has fought to keep up.

That's all starting to change.

After finishing 8-9 in the 2000-01 season, the Huskies compiled an impressive 20-11 record last year, capping the breakout season with a run to the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

Kara Bjorklund

The team's success can be attributed both to the hard work of second-year coach Jim McLaughlin and his staff, as well as to the rising confidence of the team's players, including senior Kara Bjorklund.

"Kara is one of our best middle quick hitters," McLaughlin says.

"She came on at the end of last year and had a good spring. Her eye work is great, and she understands what she needs to do to be a good player."

It is no coincidence that Bjorklund's rise was mirrored by that of the Huskies. Hailing from Olympia, Wash., the 5-foot-11 Bjorklund is an essential component of the Husky team. In 2002, Bjorklund led the Huskies in hitting percentage at .397, the second-highest average ever by a UW player. She expects nothing less of herself or her team in 2003.

"This year my goal is to be a big impact and a real leader on the team," Bjorklund says. "We all want to make it back to the NCAA tournament this year. I want to help keep the team together, and I want us to go as far as we can. We definitely have the talent to do really well."

Having recovered from two surgeries already in her UW career, Bjorklund understands that success can only be earned through hard work.

"Surgery was tough because I had never been injured before," she says. "When you're hurt, there's a whole different mentality you have to deal with, and you have to focus on getting better. All I wanted was to play through a whole season and have an entire winter to train. Being hurt just made me want to play even more."

Her skills would suggest that Bjorklund has played volleyball her entire life, but in fact she has only played seriously for less than 10 years, since accepting a friend's invitation to fill in for another player in a youth tournament. When the tournament ended, Bjorklund sought out other matches in which to play. Eventually she joined the team at Olympia's Capital High School, where she would earn All-State and league MVP honors.

Washington took interest, and Bjorklund jumped at the chance to play for the team she had always loved as a child.

"My dad is a die-hard Husky football fan, and when I was younger I always went to the football games," she says. "I was always around Husky sports, so I was pretty much born and bred a Husky. When the opportunity came for me to go to school here, I knew I had to take it."

Since her arrival at Washington, Bjorklund's impact has been measurable both in statistics and wins.

After averaging 1.44 kills per game as a freshman, Bjorklund averaged 2.19 per game last year, while also raising her blocking average from 0.73 blocks a game in 2000 to 1.21 in 2002. With someone as motivated to work as Bjorklund, however, there is always room to improve.

"What impresses me about Kara is that she has good drive and has pride in being a Husky," says McLaughlin. "She has all the physical ability in the world. If we keep her healthy, she can be one of the best players in the conference."

That statement says more about Bjorklund than meets the eye, as the Pac-10 is a national volleyball powerhouse with teams such as Stanford and USC. However, it is the team's annual matchup with in-state rival Washington State that has Bjorklund most excited.

"I'm definitely looking forward to playing Washington State this year at their place," she says. "We haven't beaten them there for a couple of years now. And their gym is a crazy place to play."

A senior, Bjorklund knows that this is her last chance to accomplish those goals left unrealized over the course of her career. Ultimately, though, what she will remember most are not her accomplishments on the court, but the relationships she has built with teammates and coaches.

"What I've enjoyed most is the people I've met and the experiences I've had here," she says. "Our team is really close and we are all good friends."

A double-major in history and communications and plans to earn her Masters' degree and teach high school history, and perhaps coach volleyball at the prep level. For now, the future consists only of the next three months leading up to the NCAA Championship.

"This year I want to go out and have a great season and know that I played my very best," she says. "I know that stepping up as a leader will be huge."

Whether majoring in history or making it, Bjorklund can rest assured that her hard work and dedication have already helped take the Husky volleyball program from the sidelines to center stage.

Now that's worth remembering.

A history major, Bjorklund made history of her own in 2002 with the second-highest hitting percentage ever by a UW player.
