WASHINGTON HUSKIES (1-1) vs.
IDAHO VANDALS (0-3)

Gilbertson Faces His Old Team With Fond Memories of Vandals

When the Huskies take the field this afternoon against the Idaho Vandals, head coach Keith Gilbertson may have flashbacks to a time when he was at the helm of the Vandal program.

Gilbertson, who is in his third stint with the Huskies, spent five years at Idaho, first in 1982 and 1985 as offensive coordinator under current San Francisco 49ers head coach Dennis Erickson, and from 1986-88 as the Vandals' head coach.

During his tenure at Idaho, the Vandals experienced a tremendous amount of success. The team went 28-9 in his three years at the helm and made the 1-AA playoffs in all three of his seasons. Their 11-2 season in 1988, producing a semifinal appearance, is still the best mark in school history.

"Idaho was a wonderful place for me. The team was great, the coaches were really great," he says. "When I think about Idaho I think about the people that I was around, the kids I coached and the friends I made. I go back every year somehow, someway."

It was while Gilbertson was coaching at Idaho, with Erickson, that he learned many of the things he now uses to make the Huskies' offense one of the most prolific in the Pac-10.

The two had coached against each other while Gilbertson was offensive coordinator at Utah State (1977-81) and Erickson his counterpart at San Jose State. When Erickson was hired Keith Gilbertson coached for several years at Idaho, where he learned many of the offensive principles that are the foundation of the high-flying Husky offense.

as Idaho's head coach, Gilbertson jumped at the opportunity to learn the intricacies of Erickson's famed "Air Express."

"Dennis had what I considered at the time to be a very cutting-edge offensive passing style," Gilbertson says. "They were managing the whole space on the field, which people weren't doing. When I had the opportunity, there was no doubt where I was going."

Almost two decades later, Gilbertson's 2003 Huskies will step on the field today to take on fourth-year head coach Tom Cable and his Vandals. The legacy of "Air Express" continues at Washington with record-setting passer Cody Pickett and wideout Reggie Williams. However, the Huskies will invest much of their time on offense against Idaho working on the running game.

The team took a big step forward in the home opener against Indiana, rushing 52 times for 195 yards. Much of the Huskies' success on the ground against the Hoosiers came from reliable veteran Rich Alexis, but in his first ever appearance, Shelton Sampson scored two touchdowns, including one on his first-career carry.

For the Huskies to pick up their second win of the season, they will have to continue to improve defensively. They did that in the second half against Indiana, allowing the visitors just 98 yards of total offense after halftime. They will also have to deal with key injuries on both sides of the ball, where Joe Lobendahn and Robin Meadow were both lost for the season with knee injuries.

"It's a real blow to both sides of the ball, where we don't have a lot of depth — particularly on the offensive line," Gilbertson says. "I don't know that we'll have to reshuffle. I thought Tusi (Sa'au) played well but obviously our depth is affected by this."

Through three games, Idaho has struggled to put the ball in the end zone, scoring just 15 points all season. Freshman quarterback Michael Harrington, the younger brother of former Oregon quarterback Joey Harrington, beat out senior Brian Lindgren for the starting job in fall camp, however, and has the talent to be dangerous to Washington.

When the two teams met last year, it was the Huskies' quarterback making noise, as Pickett became the first UW passer ever to throw for 400 yards in two straight games by racking up 438 yards through the air, including three touchdowns. Charles Frederick supplied the highlight of the game, zigzagging through traffic for a 74-yard touchdown reception.

The history between the Huskies and the Vandals goes deeper than Gilbertson's coaching roots. Dan Cozzetto, the Huskies' offensive line coach, played at Idaho from 1976-78, and also spent 11 years on the Vandals' staff, both with Gilbertson and Cable.

"This will be the fourth time I have coached against them," Gilbertson says. "All four times it's been one of my former players and a guy that was on my staff, Tom Cable, on the other sideline. Also Bret Ingalls, their offensive coordinator, was on my staff at Idaho. He, Tom and I all grew up in the same neighborhood. We all had the distinction of getting chewed out by Keith Gilbertson, Sr."

The Huskies can only hope that some of the historical storylines running rampant throughout the sidelines can make their way to the field, where Washington has fared well in the series against Idaho, winning 32 of 36 games all-time between the two teams.

If history is in fact on the Huskies' side, the Vandals could be in for a trip back in time — to Idaho, circa 1982.

Washington-Idaho Ties: Obviously, there are numerous ties between the Washington and Idaho football programs. The top connection is that current Husky head man Keith Gilbertson spent a total of five seasons in Moscow, two (1982 and 1985) as offensive coordinator and three more (1986-88) as head coach. Additionally, Husky defensive coordinator Tim Hundley coached three seasons at Idaho (1977-79), serving as defensive coordinator in the last of those three years. Husky offensive line coach Dan Cozzetto played at Idaho (1976-78) and then coached there for a total of 11 seasons (1979-89), a stint that saw him work on staffs with (and under) Gilbertson and over and alongside Idaho head coach Tom Cable. Cable was a senior offensive lineman at Idaho when Gilbertson was offensive coordinator and then served two years under Gilbertson as a graduate assistant in 1987 and 1988. Cable was also the offensive line coach at California when Gilbertson was the Bears' head coach. Idaho offensive coordinator Bret Ingalls graduated from Snohomish (Wash.) High School, the same school as Gilbertson and where Gilbertson's father coached. Receivers coach Tarn Sublett is a former UW quarterback and was a graduate assistant at Washington in 2000, coaching the Husky receivers. Idaho's preseason roster included 21 players from the state of Washington.

Among the Huskies and Vandals that played on the same high school team: IU junior Orlando Winston played at Garfield High along with Husky Isaiah Stanback; UI's Jeff Stowe with UW's Ryan Brooks at Richland High; UI's Lee Jones and UW's Jason Benn and Ty Eriks at O'Dea; UI's Brian Yarno and UW's Evan Benjamin at Redmond; and UI's Akeem Anthony and UW's Reggie Williams, Felix Sweetman and Anthony Russo at Lakes. The Husky roster includes only one player from Idaho — quarterback Cody Pickett from Caldwell.

Pickett in the Pac ... Career: With almost each game, Cody Pickett moves up on the Pac-10 career passing chart. The record (11,818 yards) is held by USC's Carson Palmer. With 7,711 career yards (Pac-10 counts all bowls), Pickett current ranks No. 17. Here are the Nos. 12 through 21 passers in Pac-10 history:

No.	Yards	Player, School, Years
12.	8,225	Rodney Peete, USC, 1985-88
13.	8,126	Troy Taylor, California, 1986-89

18.	7,669	John Paye, Stanford, 1983-86

Tank's Quick Start: Senior captain and defensive tackle Terry "Tank" Johnson got his season off to a good start at Ohio State, racking up a pair of sacks in the Huskies' loss to the Buckeyes. He followed that with three tackles for loss, including one sack, vs. Indiana. Johnson, a former partial qualifier, could return for another season if he graduates this year (he's on track to do so). Last year, Johnson, who originally came to the UW as a tight end, was tied for third on the team with five sacks on the season. Incidentally, each of the last two seasons, Johnson has managed to score a touchdown on a pass interception, despite playing on the defensive line. He scored on a 38-yard interception return in the 2001 Holiday Bowl vs. Texas and then intercepted a pass in the end zone last year vs. San Jose State.

Orlando Winston played at Garfield High along with Husky Isaiah Stanback; UI's Jeff Stowe with UW's Ryan Brooks at Richland High; UI's Lee Jones and UW's Jason Benn and Ty Eriks at O'Dea; UI's Brian Yarno and UW's Evan Benjamin at Redmond; and UI's Akeem Anthony and

by Noab Coban

In order to succeed at the grueling game of football, one must be willing to sacrifice body and mind for gridiron glory.

In so doing, each proprietor of the pigskin must coerce his body into that elite state of physical fitness known only as “football shape.” He must then be endlessly coached, his every on-field action programmed through countless hours of training. Needless to say, years of preparation are often required before a player can become an impact contributor on any level.

Unless you’re Rich Alexis.

In that case, you can rush for 298 yards and five touchdowns in your first organized game.

“I didn’t even practice with the team,” says the Husky tailback of his first football experience, during the spring of his junior year at Boca Raton, Fla.’s Pope John Paul II High School. “I went out there without being taught anything. Basically, I had no technique. They just gave me the ball and told me to run.”

How did Alexis run rampant during what should have been his football baby steps?

It was all a matter of picking up his dribble.

You see, Alexis actually had plenty of experience running with the ball — it’s just that he was used to doing his running on the hard wood of the basketball court as opposed to the pliant green turf of the football field. A rabid basketball enthusiast growing up, Alexis had more hoop dreams than football fantasies.

“Basically, I was just a basketball person,” explains Alexis. “I never played football. I had a basketball coach in high school that was like a father-figure to me. Everything was going well — we went to the state championship in my junior year — until he decided to leave and coach another school.”

Suddenly, the man who Alexis hoped would help him fulfill his hoop dreams was gone.

“My first reaction was to panic,” continues the Coral Springs native. “I started to wonder how I was going to get to college.

“He was such a great coach that, even though I was only 5-foot-11, I thought he could help me get a scholarship somewhere,” Alexis continues. “It’s hard to play college basketball at 5’11” unless you’re a point guard, which I wasn’t.

“I knew that if I played football I’d be a big running back, so I gave it a try.”

That try resulted in Alexis’ 298-yard, five score effort in the Pope John Paul II spring game. It was obvious he had a promising future in his new sport.

There was only one problem.

Alexis’ parents, Numa and Alicia, didn’t want their son to play football. They had encouraged him to play basketball, but were hesitant to allow him to take up football, especially considering his relative inexperience under the helmet. Alexis, though, had a simple solution that changed their minds.

“It came to a point where I put it to them simply,” Alexis recalls. “I said, ‘Do you want to pay for school, or do you want me to go to school for free? I can get a scholarship that will get me a free ride, but football is where it’s at.’ They came to the realization that football might be the best thing for me to do to get a college scholarship.”

With his parents’ blessing, Alexis fulfilled his burgeoning football potential, following his stunning spring debut with a senior year in which he rushed for 700 yards and 13 touchdowns. As a result, Alexis found himself on the football recruitment radar of schools such as Miami, Florida State, Kansas State and Ohio State. Ultimately, though, it was a school on the opposite side of the country that most appealed to him — a school that Alexis had admittedly never heard of before a friend from high school had enrolled there just a year before.

That friend was a promising kicker named John Anderson. The school that most wanted Alexis was the University of

Alexis burst onto the scene in 2000, rushing for a UW freshman-record 726 yards to help UW to an 11-1 record.

“I’m going to work real hard, try to get out on the field, and just help the team out any way I can. I’m not expecting anything, I just want to get out there and play.”

Washington.

As it turned out, the UW's interest in the roundballer-turned-pigskin phenom was fueled by more than word-of-mouth from its new kicker. Little did Alexis know, but Anderson's father was the one videotaping the action from the stands at Pope John Paul II. Impressed by the team's new star, Anderson sent tapes of Alexis to the Husky coaches. Soon the purple and gold were hotly pursuing the second of the three players (former Husky Anderson, Alexis and Husky junior wideout Charles Frederick) that would become the members of Washington's "Florida Connection."

Impressed by the Husky coaches' interest and wowed by a visit to the Washington campus, Alexis made the decision to come to the UW. Just a few weeks into his freshman fall camp, however, the self-described "true Floridian" was starting to regret his decision. Homesick, Alexis wasn't sure if he would stay at Washington, but decided to tough it out at least until the home opener against the Miami Hurricanes, one of his favorite childhood teams.

With the Huskies leading the fourth-ranked Hurricanes 21-3 in the third quarter, Alexis' decision to stay was rewarded.

Put in the game "so my parents could see me on TV," Alexis was assigned to block for former Husky quarterback Marques Tuiasosopo on a passing play. Fate, however, and Alexis' penchant for strong debuts, quickly intervened.

"Marques changed the play to a running play," says Alexis. "He audibled, tossed me the ball, and then I was just running for my life. I went 50 yards into the end zone. It was one of the scariest moments ever for me. I was running for my life, period. But it was great. That moment helped me seal my decision to stay here at Washington."

As it turned out, Alexis' renewed commitment helped propel the team to an 11-1 season in 2000. Thrust into the thick of the offensive mix after his Miami debut, Alexis played in all 12 games of his freshman campaign, starting four. The unexpected playing time allowed him to rush for a UW freshman-record 726 yards and nine touchdowns, while averaging an astounding 6.2 yards per carry. Best of all, Alexis capped his freshman campaign with a trip to the Rose Bowl, a 34-24 Washington victory over Purdue in which he rushed for 78 yards on 10 carries. Included in that total was a 50 yard scamper — the longest non-scoring rush in Husky bowl history.

It was a game, and an experience, he will never forget.

"The Rose Bowl was a lot different for me," Alexis remembers. "I didn't grow up watching Pac-10 football. I knew it was the 'Granddaddy Of Them All,' but I still had to adjust to it. The Rose Bowl wasn't new to the other guys on the team; they knew what to expect because most of them were West Coast guys. But everything was new to me. I had big eyes everywhere I went.

"It was so much fun to go in there and play in such a big game. To be a true freshman and get a chance to get in that game, that was incredible. That game's so hard to get to; you never know when you'll get back to the Rose Bowl. I'm just happy I got there my first year and got a chance to play."

After suffering injury setbacks in each of the last two seasons, a healthy Alexis hopes the Rose Bowl is where the Huskies will finish their season in 2003. An important part of the puzzle in the Washington backfield, the senior also realizes that his continued improvement will be crucial in attaining that goal.

"Personally, I just want to keep improving, every year," he remarks. "I don't want to be mediocre. I want to do things better than I did last year. I'm going to work real hard, try to get out on the field, and just help the team out any way I can. I'm not expecting anything, I just want to get out there and play.

"I haven't played football for very long, so I still have a lot more learn. I haven't tapped my potential."

A veteran player for the first time in his football playing career, Alexis hopes his newfound experience will help make his farewell to Husky football as impressive as his stunning debut.

Alexis scored 10 touchdowns in 2002.

Keith Gilbertson

A well-respected coach in the Pacific Northwest for more than 20 years, Keith Gilbertson was named the head football coach at Washington on July 29. The Husky job is Gilbertson's third stint as a head college coach.

The 2003 season will be the ninth year of coaching at Washington for Gilbertson. He is currently in his third term of service with the Husky program. He was a graduate assistant coach in 1975, an assistant coach from 1989-91 and again from 1999-2002.

Gilbertson becomes the 24th coach in the program's history. At age 55, he is the oldest individual to be named Washington's head coach. Gilbertson replaces Rick Neuheisel, who was terminated on June 12 after guiding the Huskies to a 33-16 record over the past four seasons.

Gilbertson's previous head coaching experience includes stints at Idaho (1986-88) and California (1992-95). He has a combined record of 48-35 at those two schools over seven seasons.

Gilbertson has been the Huskies' offensive coordinator the last three seasons. He was also a graduate assistant coach at the UW in 1976, as offensive line coach in 1998-90 and as the offensive coordinator in the national championship season of 1991. In 1999, he returned to Washington as assistant head coach and tight ends coach before being named offensive coordinator prior to the 2000 season.

In his two terms as the UW's offensive coordinator, Gilbertson built a reputation for varied and potent offenses. Gilbertson was instrumental in developing Washington's offense into one of the most explosive in the nation between 1989 and 1991. He was the Huskies' offensive line coach his first two seasons and took over as the offensive coordinator in 1991 when Washington won the national championship. The 1991 Washington team led the Pac-10 in total offense, rushing offense and scoring offense, relying on a balanced attack

In 2002, that offense was the most potent passing attack ever seen not only at Washington, but in the Pac-10. Junior quarterback Cody Pickett smashed the Pac-10 record for single-season passing yardage and completions while the UW threw for 4,501 yards as a team, breaking the old Pac-10 record by 712 yards.

In 2001, with a sophomore Pickett taking over the signalcalling, the Husky offense was second in the Pac-10 in passing, averaging 279.5 yards per game. A year earlier, behind senior quarterback Marques Tuiasosopo, UW's option-oriented rushing attack led the Pac-10 and was 16th nationally. The Huskies' ability to come from behind in the fourth quarter helped UW to the Pac-10 title and the 2001 Rose Bowl Championship.

Gilbertson began his coaching career as a graduate assistant at Idaho State (1971-74) and earned a degree in education from Western Washington, where he was a grad assistant in 1975.

After serving the 1976 season as a grad assistant at Washington for Don James, he was the offensive coordinator at Utah State from 1977 to 1981. In 1982 he joined Dennis Erickson's staff at Idaho for one season as the offensive coordinator. The Vandals recorded an 8-

Gilbertson's offense has turned quarterback Cody Pickett into one of the nation's top passers.

3 regular-season record and advanced to the quarterfinals of the NCAA I-AA playoffs.

For three seasons, from 1983-85, he coached in the USFL for the Los Angeles Express. He returned to Idaho in 1985 as the offensive coordinator and helped the Vandals to a 9-2 regular-season record and another trip to the NCAA playoffs. The following season he took over as Idaho's head coach when Erickson was named head coach at Washington State.

Gilbertson led the Vandals to an 11-2 record in 1988, the best mark in school history. That year Idaho advanced to the NCAA Division I-AA semifinals and he was named the Big Sky Conference coach of the year. His 1987 and 1988 teams both won the Big Sky championships. His .757 career winning percentage is still the highest in Idaho history.

His three Vandal teams produced a combined record of 28-9 and advanced to the I-AA playoffs all three seasons. When he left Idaho his winning percentage (.757) ranked as the second best mark in the history of the Big Sky Conference. His winning percentage of .826 in conference games (19-4) was the best in league history.

After working on James' staff at Washington from 1989-91, Gilbertson left the Huskies following the team's 1991 national championship season to take over as the head coach at California. His four-year stint as the Golden Bears' coach was highlighted by the 1993 team that posted a 9-4 record and defeated Iowa 37-3 in the Alamo Bowl. That win stands as California's last bowl victory. Gilbertson was also the last Cal coach to pin a loss on arch rival Stanford until 2002.

Following his head coaching tenure at California, Gilbertson worked as an assistant coach for the Seattle Seahawks on Erickson's staff for three seasons. In 1996 he served as a defensive specialist and took over as the tight ends coach for the 1997 and 1998 seasons.

Gilbertson grew up in Snohomish, Wash., where his father, Keith, Sr., has been a long-time prep coach. He attended Snohomish High School before going on to play football at Central Washington in 1967, Columbia Basin Junior College in 1968, and Hawaii from 1969-70.

He later returned to earn his bachelor's degree in social sciences from Central Washington in 1971. Gilbertson earned a degree in education from Western Washington in 1974.

Gilbertson was born in Snohomish on May 15, 1948, he attended Snohomish High School. He and his wife, Barbara, were married in 1988 and have two children, Kristin and David. Gilbertson also has an adult daughter, Ann, who resides in Los Angeles.

Gilbertson has been flexible as a coordinator, installing an option offense in 1999 to feature the talents of quarterback Marques Tuiasosopo.

Dr. Lee L. Huntsman was appointed interim president of the UW on Nov. 4, 2002.

Huntsman has served as UW provost and vice president for academic affairs since March 1997. As the University's chief academic and budgetary officer, he has provided leadership in educational and curriculum development, formulation and allocation of capital and operating budgets, academic and administrative personnel matters, allocation of space, long-range strategic planning, and management of the University's research programs. The provost serves as deputy to the UW president and provides advice and assistance to the president, the deans and the faculty in these matters.

Huntsman, who joined the UW faculty in 1968, holds the faculty appointment of professor of bioengineering. He served as director of the Center for Bioengineering (now Department of Bioengineering) from 1980 to 1996. He also served as associate dean for scientific affairs in the School of Medicine from 1993 to 1996, when he became acting provost. His laboratory's research, which received continuous funding from the National Institutes of Health, applied principles of engineering to biology and medicine in the measurement and regulation of the cardiovascular system.

He received a bachelor of science degree in electrical engineering from Stanford University in 1963 and a Ph.D. in biomedical engineering from the University of Pennsylvania in 1968. Huntsman is a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the American Institute of Medical and Biological Engineering.

DIRECTOR OF ATHLETICS BARBARA HEDGES

When it comes to recognition, Washington athletic director Barbara Hedges would prefer that the spotlight fall on Husky student-athletes. Still, it is hard not to acknowledge her accomplishments.

During the past decade, Washington's athletic teams have enjoyed unprecedented success. The Husky program is also recognized as a leader in gender equity, community service and outreach programs and Student-Athlete Support Services.

In 1999-2000 Hedges was named the NACDA/Continental Airlines Athletic Director of the Year for the NCAA Division I West Region. She was presented the Honda Award of Merit and the Seattle/King County Sports and Events Council named her their MVP of the Year Award Winner.

There is a chalkboard in Hedges' office filled with inspirational messages, quotations and philosophies provided by her staff and visitors. One of her passages reads, "Hope is not a strategy." It is very appropriate. The successes for Washington's athletic programs during Hedges' tenure that have earned her so many acknowledgements have been forged in hard work, planning and a commitment to excellence, not just wishful thinking.

Washington is currently in the second phase of its highly-successful "Campaign for the Student-Athlete" that has helped to generate several major capital improvements on the Montlake Campus. In November of 2000 the newly renovated Bank of America Arena at Hec Edmundson Pavilion opened to rave reviews. In addition to providing an elite competition venue for Washington's basketball, volleyball and gymnastics teams, as well as lockerrooms, training rooms, equipment rooms and new meeting rooms, the project also provided a home for the new $1 million Husky Hall of Fame that opened in the fall of 2002.

During September of 2001 Washington opened the $29 million Dempsey Indoor multi-purpose practice facility. With over 100,000 square feet of competition space, Washington's student-athletes have the nation's finest multi-purpose practice setting for year-round training purposes.

In 2000, Hedges' relationship with the NFL's Seattle Seahawks resulted in a $1 million gift towards the installation of a FieldTurf playing surface in Husky Stadium. Washington became just the second major college football program in the nation to play on the surface that has won rave reviews from players on both the collegiate and professional levels, and was later installed on a practice field adjacent to the stadium.

Still to come are stadium projects for the new soccer and baseball fields and a $20 million renovation of the Conibear Shellhouse, which also serves as the home for the Total Student-Athlete program.

It seems that Hedges' workload is never ending, but that is a reflection of her commitment to making the Washington program one of the best in the nation. The results have been proven on the field of competition.

In just her first year on the job, in 1991, the Husky football team posted a perfect 12-0 season by defeating Michigan in the Rose Bowl and winning the national championship.

The Husky women's rowing team has won three NCAA team titles, while the UW softball team has reached the College World Series seven of the last 10 years.

Under Hedges' direction the Husky golf, baseball and tennis programs have emerged on the national scene. Men's soccer, women's rowing and softball have all been ranked No. 1 in the nation during the past few years.

Hedges' efforts in gender equity have made Washington one of the national leaders in providing equal opportunities for both male and female student-athletes. In December of 1997, The Chronicle of Higher Education cited Washington as "the only Division I-A institution with an undergraduate enrollment that was at least 50 percent female to have achieved substantial proportionality in both scholarships and participation."

Hedges is similarly committed to a high level of academic achievement among Washington's student-athlete population. To this end, she has instituted a number of progressive measures — such as the Total Student-Athlete program devoted to leadership training, mentor programs and career nights — that she hopes will aid the student-athletes in more easily achieving all their non-athletic goals. The University's "UWired" program is unique in the nation, allowing student-athletes access to laptop computers to stay in touch with their classes while on the road.

Prior to her arrival at Washington in 1991, Hedges spent 17 years as an associate athletic director at the University of Southern California, where she was promoted to Senior Associate Director of Athletics in 1989.

Hedges' commitment to college athletics makes her a familiar name on the national scene. Hedges has served as president of the Council of Collegiate Women Athletic Administrators and the Western Collegiate Athletic Association and also as president of the Division I-A Women's Athletic Administrators. She chaired the NCAA Women's Tennis Committee for eight years and the NCAA Division I Men's and Women's Tennis Committee in 1988. She was one of a three-member NCAA Special Television Committee to negotiate the NCAA rights for all sports except football and basketball with ESPN, ABC, CBS and international television.

In 1996-97 she was the first woman to serve as president of the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics and in 1998 she was named the first woman to the Board of Directors for the National Football Foundation. She is also on the Board of Directors of the Division I-A Athletic Directors' Association, and has served previously with the Blue Ribbon Task Force for College Football USA, and the NCAA Working Group to study basketball issues. She is currently the chair of the Pac-10 Men's Basketball Officiating Committee, the Pac-10 Legislative Committee, and serves on the Pac-10 Athletic Directors' Television Committee. She is a member of the NCAA Championships and Competition Cabinet and serves on the regional selection committee for the College Football Hall of Fame.

She has also served as tournament director for the 1995 NCAA Men's Final Four, the 1993 NCAA Men's Basketball West Regional and the 1984 West Regional Women's Basketball Championship. Hedges was instrumental in bringing the 1992 Division I Women's Final Four to Los Angeles. At USC, she was administratively responsible for the 1988 NCAA Division I Men's Golf Championship and the 1990 Division I Men's Tennis Championship.

Before going to USC in 1973, Hedges coached gymnastics and taught physical education at the University of Arizona. During her five years with the Wildcats, Hedges coached her team to three conference championships and assisted in integrating women's athletic programs into the University's athletic structure. Prior to arriving at Arizona, Hedges coached gymnastics and taught physical education at high schools in Wyoming and Colorado.

Hedges received her bachelor's degree in physical education from Arizona State University in 1963, where she was honored as the University's outstanding physical education major while also being named to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities. She received her master's from the University of Arizona in 1971.

Hedges was born August 23, 1937, in Glendale, Arizona. She and her husband, John, have two grown children, Mark and Gregg.

Stepping up to the Challenge

by Mason Kelley

For as long as she can remember, Lindsey Egerdahl has always loved sports.

As a child she tried them all, trying to find one that fit. She especially loved soccer, but in eighth grade decided to give track a try.

A week later, she wanted to quit.

"I went to the coach and I said, 'Look, I quit, I can't do this anymore,'" she says. "To quit was a really big deal for me, but my coach wouldn't let me. He said, 'No, you did well in P.E. in the mile. Take a day off — two if you need it — and I'll see you when you come back.' I just sat there dumbfounded. I was quitting! It had taken a lot of guts for me to go to my coach and quit."

Egerdahl took her day off and, as the coach had predicted, returned to practice. Her opponents would soon wish she hadn't.

With little or no training, Egerdahl dominated the prep ranks in the mile, going undefeated in the event during her eighth-grade year. She continued to excel the following year at Auburn High School, earning a fifth-place finish at the 1997 Class 4A state cross-country meet and never placing below seventh in four years of state competition.

Ultimately, it was track that earned Egerdahl the chance to continue her love for sports at the collegiate level. With three sisters at in-state colleges, staying close to home was always the first option.

"When I made the decision where to go to college, there was an underlying pressure to stay close because all of my sisters stayed in state," says Egerdahl. "I came on my recruiting trip here and it just fit. Also, I wanted to be somewhere where I could watch my niece grow up and have my parents around to watch races. They have been so supportive that I thought they deserved that."

Egerdahl had gotten by on natural talent at the prep level, but when she arrived on the UW campus in the fall of 2001, she quickly discovered that it would take more than just talent to stand out on a squad that has qualified for the NCAA Championships every year since 1997.

"I came in my freshman year scared and out of shape," she says. "I was 10th on our team, the only freshman not to travel. All I wanted that year was to some way impact my team."

For Egerdahl, it felt like she was back in eighth grade, surrounded by frustration. Just as she had back then, though, she stuck with it, and soon everything began to change.

"The first two weeks I kept calling my mom and saying, 'I can't do this! I am not cut out for this,'" she says. "Then my sophomore year, I ran second on our team, and all of the sudden the pieces just fell into place."

Egerdahl's sophomore campaign was a complete reversal of all that had ailed her as a freshman. She was Washington's second runner at both the NCAA Regional and NCAA Championships, and earned a seventh-place finish in the 1,500 meters at the Pac-10 Championships. It is this ability to improve significantly from year to year that makes Egerdahl love her sport.

"I do this because you can see success," she says. "I am the type of person that likes to gauge where I'm at, and success in this sport is something that measures that. A clock never lies; you know exactly where you are."

This year, with no seniors on the UW cross-country squad, Egerdahl has been named a co-captain, along with junior Camille Connelly.

"I'm the youngest of four girls in my family, so I am really used to knowing when to shut up and when to step up," she says. "I have been fortunate to have had amazing girls in front of me, both in high school and in college, who have showed me the path to success. Now it's my time to step forward and be that kind of a leader for the young girls on our team."

There certainly isn't a person on the team Egerdahl can't relate to, from the most successful runner to the girl in last who isn't sure whether she belongs. With a young team behind them, and a streak of six-straight NCAA Championships appearances on the line, the captains will have their work cut out for them this fall.

"We definitely want to make it to nationals and place well," she says. "We are young, but we have seen what it takes to be great. The enthusiasm is high, and the potential for growth is unlimited. I couldn't be more excited to lead this team."

It is up to Egerdahl to pass on to her teammates the lessons she has learned — stay positive, believe in yourself, and most importantly, never give up.

Egerdahl is determined to lead the Huskies back to the NCAA Championships for the seventh-straight season.

"I have been fortunate to have had amazing girls in front of me...who have showed me the path to success. Now it's my time to step forward and be that kind of a leader for the young girls on our team."

HUSKY LEGENDS

A ready one of the greatest running backs in Washington history, Greg Lewis put up a season in 1990 that will be long remembered for its statistical dominance.

Lewis set a then-UW record with 1,279 rushing yards, an average of 127.9 yards per game that at the time was also a UW best. He rushed for 100 yards in all but one game, leading the Huskies to a 10-2 record and a 46-34 win over Iowa in the 1991 Rose Bowl.

Lewis was honored by the Pac-10 as its Offensive Player of the Year, placed seventh in voting for the Heisman Trophy and was the first recipient of the prestigious Doak Walker Award, presented annually to the nation's top senior Running back.

A fifth-round draft pick of the Denver Broncos in 1991, Lewis played two years in the NFL before returning to private business in Seattle. He currently serves as director of Washington's Big "W" Alumni Club, uniting Husky legends of the past with those of the present and future.

Progressive University in a Picturesque Campus Setting

Teaching, research and service. These three tenets always have been at the heart of the University of Idaho's mission. Today, perhaps more than ever, administrators and faculty are succeeding at maintaining these standards.

Nearly every facet of daily life in Idaho is somehow impacted by University outreach programs. Life is never dull at the UI, and an enthusiastic movement for the humanities is sweeping across an already artistic campus. Standout alumni excelling in all professional fields are reminding the world that "from here, you can go anywhere."

Today more than 11,000 students are enrolled at UI. Kiplinger's Magazine consistently places Idaho on its list of the top-100 public universities, this year ranking 69th out of nearly 600 public colleges, and becoming one of only four western schools to make the list. The University of Idaho consistently receives high marks from U.S. News and World Report, and the Carnegie Foundation lists UI as one of the top 152 research institutions in the country. Idaho's ranking as one of the "most wired" universities by Yahoo! Internet Life Magazine is becoming routine, with the UI placing third this year among public schools in the West.

When the ground for Idaho's first university originally was purchased, the Moscow Mirror boasted about the natural beauty of the campus setting: "Probably no more slightly location could be found in Idaho. The location commands a perfect view of Paradise Valley and the spur of mountains beyond."

In addition to the majestic surroundings, the UI campus is adorned with buildings with their own individual appeal. Historic War Memorial Gymnasium is protected by its gridiron gargoyles. The elegant Administration Building reflects a collegiate Gothic style. A watchful clock tower and extraordinary library are at the center of campus. The completed Idaho Commons, Student Recreation Center and Agricultural Biotechnology Laboratory mark the beginning of the biggest "building boom" in school history. Two other buildings, among which are the Vandal Athletic Center addition to the ASUI-Kibbie Activity Center and the J.A. Albertson College of Business and Economics Building, are under construction.

There are many examples of UI's influence throughout Idaho. The success of the College of Law is apparent in Idaho's judiciary – most judges and magistrates throughout the state are alumni. Prominent alumni include former Albertson's Chairman and CEO Gary Michael, City Council President Carolyn Terteling-Payne and Gov. Dirk Kempthorne. It has been estimated that one third of all decision-makers in the state's capital hail from UI.

UI is changing the world on many fronts with innovative research occurring in a variety of fields. The Carnegie Foundation currently ranks UI as an Extensive Doctoral University. Thirty-six other colleges such as Clemson University, the University of Notre Dame, Brigham Young University and the University of California-Santa Cruz share this classification.

The Computer Science Department at UI has been making great strides in an area of national consequence. NASA's top administrator, Dan Goldin, was the speaker at UI's 2000 winter commencement. Said Goldin, "The University of Idaho does some very cutting-edge work in the area of cyber security, and we at NASA have an incredible amount of information ... that we want to be more resistant to cyber attack." Researchers from UI also have been working with NASA on a wide range of research projects such as the study of Jupiter and Saturn.

The College of Agriculture is tackling a problem of international concern, the control of pathogenic organisms such as E. coli bacteria. The project recently received a $9.7 million grant, the largest grant in university history, from the National Institutes of Health.

The Lionel Hampton School of Music has been recognized for its excellent programs in theory and performance. The Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival, which takes place every third week in February, has been widely accepted as one of the world's greatest jazz festivals. The festival's legendary namesake, who may be the greatest vibraphonist of all time, highlights the nightly performances each year.

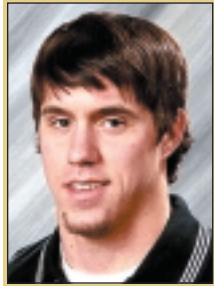

Thousands of aspiring musicians from as far away as Japan and Russia come to Moscow for the week in hopes of winning various competitions in the day, and absorbing world-class jazz at night. Contemporary jazz giants such as Dizzy Gillespie, Lou Rawls, Nancy Wilson and Diana Krall have performed at the event. The Lionel Hampton Center, a four-part project announced by a committee featuring former President George Bush and his wife Barbara, will include a new performance and educational facility and a home for the UI's International Jazz Collections.

Bush expressed his appreciation for UI's support, saying, "I want to thank the University of Idaho for its dedication to Lionel Hampton, and to the future of jazz in the United States and around the world. No other institution has focused so much of its energy on preparing the Lionel Hamptons of tomorrow."

A new marketing campaign at the University of Idaho exclaims, "From here you can go anywhere." Thousands of successful UI alumni across the world would affirm that. Former Vandals have succeeded in nearly every professional venue imaginable – from athletics to aeronautics.

Wherever He May ROAM

by Mason Kelley

Adam Seery grew up playing soccer. In his mind, there was nothing better than being out on the soccer field. Then, his dad suggested he give football a try.

The idea didn't sit well with Seery.

"I had played soccer for six years," the fullback says. "I wasn't happy about it. I said, 'No, dad, I don't want to play football.'"

After a little poking and prodding, Seery agreed and turned out for a pee-wee team coached by a family friend. When Richard Seery picked his son up from his first practice later that day, Adam had just one thing to tell his father:

"I'm never playing soccer again."

And he never did.

"After the first hit a little flame lit inside of me," the senior says.

Seery starred at quarterback and safety at Albuquerque's El Dorado High School, a team that turned out five Division-I players. Seery wanted to play in college, but in New Mexico, he knew he had to be his own recruiter.

"I wanted to get out of New Mexico and so I sent a bunch of tapes out," Seery says. "It is really hard to get recruited when you are from New Mexico. I decided that it was going to take a lot of work to get my name out there. I wrote the 17 best schools I wanted to go to and out of those 17 schools, there were 10 or so that were really interested in me."

Adam Seery

Of those 17 schools, Washington stood out the most. The tradition and success of the football program was appealing, but it was the personal attention he received from then-quarterbacks coach Cary Conklin that sold him on the UW.

Seery was recruited in 1999 as a quarterback, and roomed with fellow Husky newcomer Cody Pickett during his freshman year.

Unfortunately, by the time Seery made his way to Washington, Conklin was gone, as Rick Neuheisel's staff took the reins in 1999. A second surprise awaited Seery just before coming to camp, when he learned that he was being switched to linebacker, a position he had never played. Over the next four-plus years, Seery would change positions three more times, and would inherit yet another position coach in 2003.

"I just want to play," says Seery, who has done everything in his power to get on the field. "It has been frustrating at times, but I come from a family that teaches you to keep a positive attitude and good things will happen. The cream will rise to the top and that is the main thing I have kept in my mind the whole time."

Seery has played quarterback, linebacker, safety and now fullback for the Huskies. Aside from some goal line sets at fullback, Seery has had to earn his playing time on special teams, a task he embraces.

"I love special teams. Last year against Oregon I was on kick-off, punt and kick-off return, and that was an absolute blast because we were all over them. I played a lot in the game, had a great game. I had a tackle and that was really exciting."

It is his mindset of never giving up and doing whatever it takes to taste the field that has made Seery successful. He hasn't played as much as he would like, but he has used his Husky career to learn valuable life lessons.

"I have learned to roll with the punches," Seery says. "To learn how to wheel and deal in terms of trying to get myself on the field and get myself playing. I have been good at a lot of positions but I haven't been great."

Every team needs a guy like Seery. He's a plug, versatile enough to fill holes anywhere on the field.

In the Huskies' season-opener at Ohio State, however, Seery found himself plugged into yet another new role — starter. After battling sophomore Ty Eriks for playing time throughout the fall, Seery was named the starter in the week leading up to camp.

"He's earned it," said head coach Keith Gilbertson at the time.

It didn't take long for Seery to become involved in the action, as he caught a pass for nine yards on the Huskies' first play from scrimmage.

It shouldn't be a surprise that senior quarterback Cody Pickett knew where to look for Seery — the two were roommates in 1999, when both were freshman quarterbacks battling for time behind Marques Tuiasosopo. Their careers have headed in different directions, but they remain friends.

Making friends is something Seery has never had trouble with, a quality handed down to him by his parents. He also credits them for the drive and determination that have kept him on the team for five years, despite the numerous obstacles.

"They have been with me since day one, through all of the ups and downs," he says. "They are the people that keep me going. I talked to my dad pretty much every day through two-a-days."

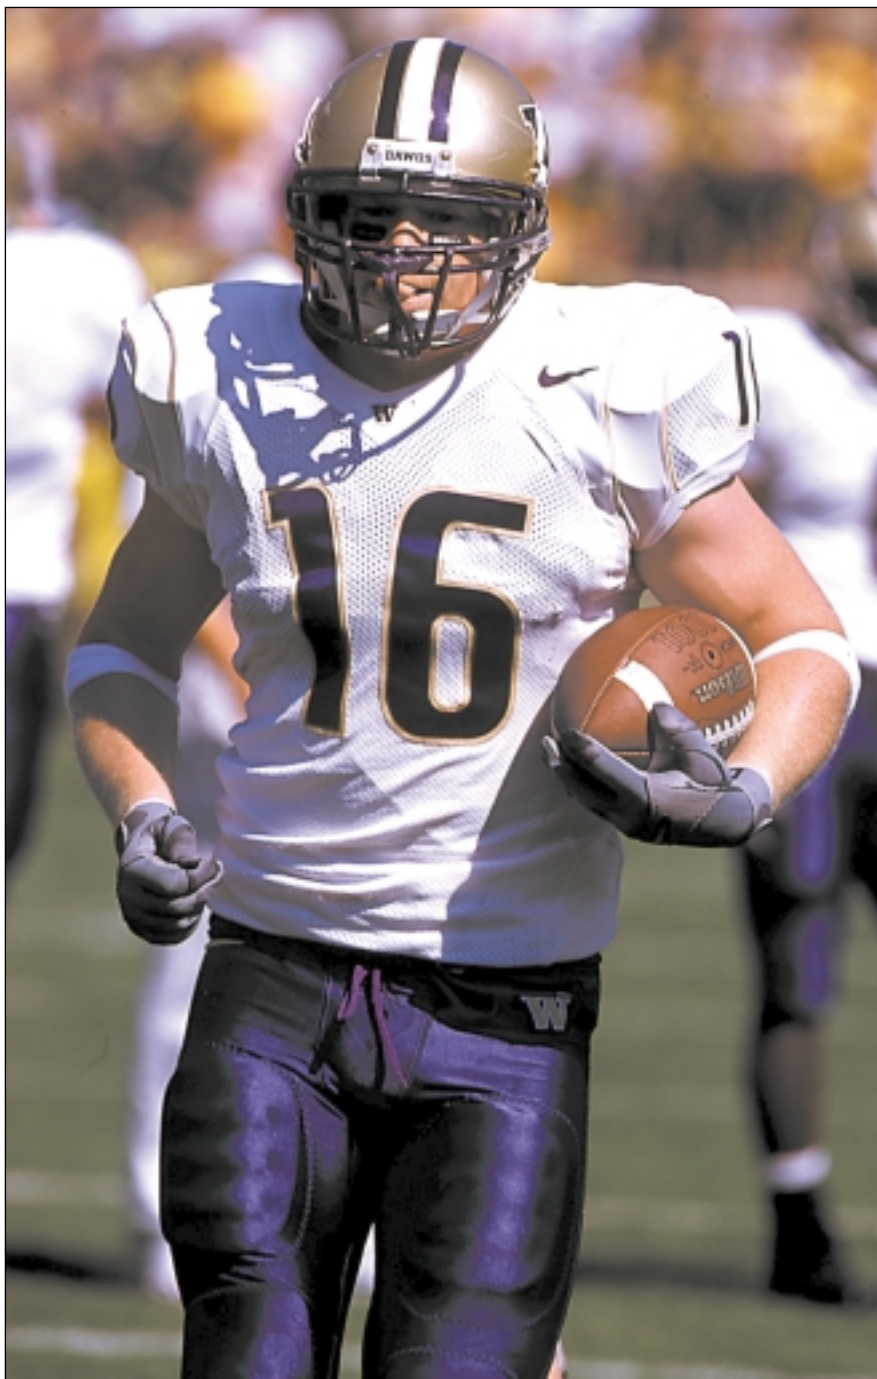

Football has taken up Seery's life ever since that one practice in fifth grade. He has worked and worked to be a success, but his career is winding down. There may be an opportunity to play in the Arena League or maybe the CFL, but Seery is also looking forward to life after football.

"I think I may end up in the southwest somewhere on some business venture," Seery says of life after football. "I want to make a lot of money and be successful."

If there is one thing football has taught Seery, it's that hard work can get you where you want. The key to life — not to mention getting on the field — is versatility, and Seery has mastered that art.

Throughout all of the position changes and hardship, Seery has never given up the game he fell in love with years ago. No matter what happens during the remainder of his football career, Seery will always have that first hit that sparked a flame inside him, a flame that has pushed him to never give up until he earns some playing time.

"A lot of guys would have turned away, transferred or something else," he says. "My dad has always told me that, if nothing else, you never quit. I stuck it out. I am here. I am playing and having a great time."

Seery earned his first-career start at Ohio State, catching a pass on the UW's first play from scrimmage.

A Proud Tradition of Academic Excellence

Founded in 1861, the University of Washington is one of the foremost institutions of higher education in the nation, richly combining its research, instructional and public service missions.

Its internationally acclaimed faculty includes five Nobel Laureates and the winner of the 1990 National Book Award for Fiction. Washington is part of an elite group of research universities whose contributions to American life are unique because they generate the basic knowledge upon which practical innovations are based.

The UW student body on the Seattle campus totals about 37,000, with an undergraduate enrollment of approximately 26,800. The UW also has campuses in Bothell and Tacoma, designed primarily for upper division (junior and senior) undergraduates and master's level graduate programs. Total enrollment at these campuses is about 3,600.

For more than 30 years, the university has been among the country's top five institutions in the dollar value of federal research grants and contracts awarded to its faculty. In 2000, the most recent year for which that data has been collected, the UW ranked second. Total grant and contract activity for 2001 exceeded $700 million. More than 80 percent of the university's grant and contract funds come from federal agencies. Research contributes directly to the educational goals of graduate and professional students, as well as to those of undergraduates.

Instruction and research at Washington are supported by a library system that is one of the most extensive in the nation, consisting of five major units and 18 branches, as well as libraries at UW Tacoma and UW Bothell, together housing more than five million volumes. In addition to offering instruction in more than 100 academic disciplines, the university offers a spectrum of continuing education courses that advance technical and professional skills and provide opportunities for personal growth and enrichment.

Washington has 17 major schools and colleges: Architecture and Urban Planning, Arts and Sciences, Business Administration, Dentistry, Education, Engineering, Forest Resources, The Graduate School, The Information School, Law, Medicine, Nursing, Ocean and Fishery Sciences, Pharmacy, Public Affairs, Public Health and Community Medicine, and Social Work.

About 90 percent of the University's undergraduate students are state residents, although instructional programs draw students from every region of the country and overseas.

Most freshmen entering Washington are in the top third of their high school graduating classes. In 2001, the average incoming freshman boasted a 3.63 high school grade point average and an 1,159 SAT score.

The magnificent architecture of the Washington campus is replete with fountains, flowers and greenery.

Beyond its academic and service missions, the UW has a strong economic impact on Washington and the Pacific Northwest.

With about 20,000 employees, Washington is the second-largest employer in King County. Washington operates the University of Washington Medical Center and Harborview Medical Center, which annually provide more than 200,000 days of patient care and record more than 300,000 visits to their outpatient clinics.

Washington also plays a critical role in attracting new business to the region. It provides these, and established businesses, with a steady stream of well-educated graduates and with highly skilled faculty members who assist business and industry in a variety of ways.

The University of Washington in Seattle is located on 703 acres in the city's northeast residential area, a beautiful setting on the shore of Lake Washington and Portage Bay. The majestic Cascade Mountains can be seen to the east and the Olympics loom to the west, while the western view includes downtown Seattle and Lake Union. The combination of this spectacular setting with buildings in both neo-Gothic and modern styles gives the campus a distinctive aura.

Cherry trees literally burst with blossoms in the spring, turning areas of the campus a vivid pink.

UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON 100 YEARS CREW

Washington Crew Caps a Century of Excellence with a Win at the Prestigious Henley Regatta

by Mason Kelley

Picture yourself at the Super Bowl. Only, imagine that all of the fans in attendance were dressed in their finest outfit — women in knee-length skirts, with fancy hats; men wearing their best coats and ties.

Imagine as well that the teams took breaks during the game — first for lunch, later for tea. While the teams sipped their chamomile, fans partake of pate and champagne, before returning to the action.

If you can imagine being at a sporting event as grand in spectacle as the Super Bowl, but as refined as an English breakfast, you can begin to understand the unique event that is the Royal Henley Regatta.

“You have got to dress to a certain standard or they won’t even let you in,” says Bob Ernst, Washington’s head men’s rowing coach. “Then you have to pay a ton of money to get into this thing. It is just like going to a major sports event, except with a dress code. You can bet that there is no one bringing in their cooler full of Budweiser.”

The race itself, first held in 1839, features top crews from around the world racing along the Thames River in London, England. Lining the banks are rows of corporate luxury boxes, while charter boats full of spectators skirt the course.

“It has just gotten bigger and bigger each year,” Ernst says. “If you are interested in sports at all, it is great to go and see the spectacle of this thing. It is just amazing. Especially when you win, because it is really special.”

The Huskies did just that this summer, winning the Ladies Challenge Plate championship in the eight-oared boat. This year’s Henley champion boat of John Lorton, Marko Petrovic, Brett Newlin, Giuseppe Lanzone, Kyle Larson, Andy Derrick, Ian Sawyer and coxswain Ryan Marks, routed Rutgers University in the championship race, winning by 4 3/4 boat lengths.

While on the trip the Huskies were all business, taking just one day to explore London and the surrounding area. The rest of the time the team was focused on the task at hand — winning the Ladies Challenge Plate.

Washington hopes that its win at the Henley will spark a run to the NCAA title.

“For most of the guys it is a really busy trip,” Ernst says. “They train an extra month past the IRAs in order to go there and participate, and once we’re there, we usually train twice a day.”

The Henley has a unique format, using single-elimination match races, while most collegiate races can feature up to six boats on the course at once. The racing conditions also differ significantly than that which the Huskies are used to, with the boats racing on an open river instead of the friendly confines of the Montlake Cut.

“Rowing on a river is different,” Ernst says. “The environment can change from hour to hour based on the weather and how much the water is flowing up or down the river, as well as how much boat traffic there is. They allow big excursion boats to be on the water right next to where you are racing, and so it’s rough water. It is a big challenge to race there.”

Washington has been a semi-regular competitor at Henley since 1958, when the Huskies lost to the Soviet Union in the final of the Grand Challenge Cup, the highest level of competition. The Ladies Challenge Plate, which the Huskies won this year, is the second highest.

“The Ladies Challenge Plate is the one all the big universities race in,” Ernst says. “Harvard was in it last year and won it. We won it this year.”

That Harvard team went on to win the IRA championship, collegiate rowing’s national title, something that the Huskies would love to do this year. They know, though, that they’ll likely have to go through the defending Henley and IRA champs to do so.

“When Harvard came to the IRAs last year, it was just the second time in 100 years they had done so,” Ernst says. “On one hand, you hope they decide not to make it three times. On the other hand, you think, ‘If they’re out there and they’re fast, let’s have them come over and we’ll race to see who’s the best.’”

Few sporting events in the world can rival the Henley, and few collegiate crew programs can rival Washington’s. Perhaps it’s fitting, then, that the Huskies’ win at Henley capped the team’s 100th year. The trophy shelf for the first century of Husky crew is full. If they can repeat the success of 2002 Henley winner Harvard, however, the trophy shelf for the team’s second century won’t be bare for long.

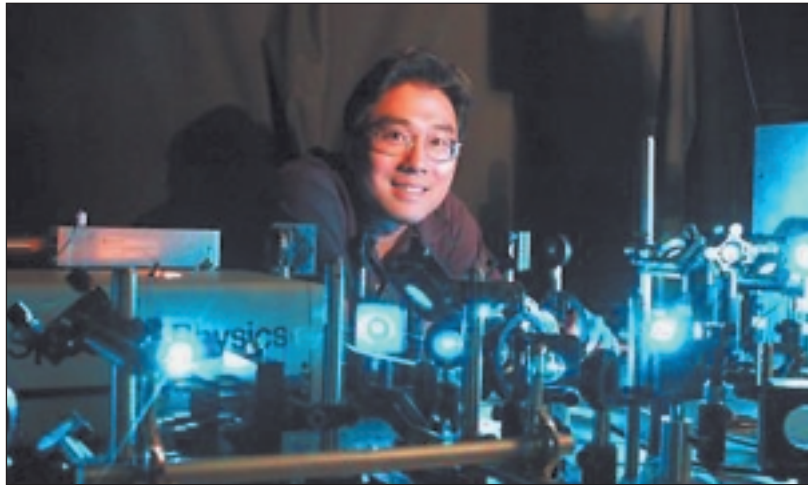

UW Researcher Awarded Grant for Study of Nerve Synapses

Daniel Chiu does research at the tiniest scales, but he hopes he can help unlock some of medical science's biggest puzzles.

Last week Chiu, an assistant chemistry professor, was named one of five recipients nationwide of $1 million research grants from the W.M. Keck Foundation's Distinguished Young Scholars in Medical Research Program. The five-year award will support his work trying to decipher how the function of nerve synapses mimics that of a computer in the processes of learning and memory. The work could lead to greater understanding of, and thus possibly a treatment for, neurological disorders such as Parkinson's and Alzheimer's diseases.

"The synapse, based on our current understanding, is where learning and memory happens," he says.

Another of the awards from the Los Angeles-based Keck Foundation goes to Adrian Ferré-D'Amaré, an investigator in the Basic Sciences Division at Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center and a UW affiliate assistant professor in biochemistry. Ferré-D'Amaré has used X-ray crystallography to decipher the three-dimensional structures of ribozymes, intricately folded RNA molecules that carry out enzymatic reactions. With the Keck award, he will apply his understanding of RNA to the design of experimentally modified RNA and other molecules that interact with RNA. Such molecules could potentially be used to treat a variety of diseases, including some cancers and blood disorders.

The Chiu research group uses lasers to remove synaptic vesicles from neurons, the working cells of nerves, and analyze how they function in synaptic transmission, learning and memory. Vesicles are minuscule pouches of liquid where chemical reactions take place that transfer information along a nerve's path. Essential in the chemical transfer of tiny information packets from one neuron to another — vesicles are just 50 nanometers across, about one-two-thousandth the width of a human hair.

The research primarily works with rat brains and cultures of brain cells. Chiu describes the work as basic research, looking at the individual makeup of vesicles one at a time, trying to find out more about what chemicals are being released during various nerve functions, and how it changes over time and with activity.

"Once we understand the molecular details, then that will shed a lot of light on various neurological functions and dysfunctions," he says.

Beyond doing cellular nanosurgery at such small scales, the Chiu group actually is doing chemistry at the same level, in amounts of solution as small as one quadrillionth of a liter, called a femtoliter.

"We try to do chemistry at such a small scale because unless we can do that, we won't be able to do what we want to do with the synaptic vesicles," Chiu said. "That's a very tiny amount of volume. That makes it challenging."

SUNNY SKIES AHEAD

by Mike Bruscas

“Soccer is the best sport in the world.” With those words, Sean Giudice puts the debate to rest. To support his theory, the Huskies’ senior forward provides the following evidence:

“You don’t have timeouts, so it’s nonstop action,” he says. “It’s a players’ game.”

Giudice, who transferred to Washington from Cal State Fullerton following his sophomore season, figures to be one of the main scoring weapons for a Huskies team looking to bounce back from a disappointing 2002 season that saw the team miss the NCAA Championships for the first time since 1994.

Unimpressed by the Hollywood lifestyle, Giudice wanted out.

“I left Fullerton because I didn’t really like life in L.A. that much,” he says. “The UW, too, had its seven-year history of NCAA success, so that appealed to me as well.”

Giudice’s only apprehension was Seattle’s infamous wet weather, yet he now sees through the age-old perception.

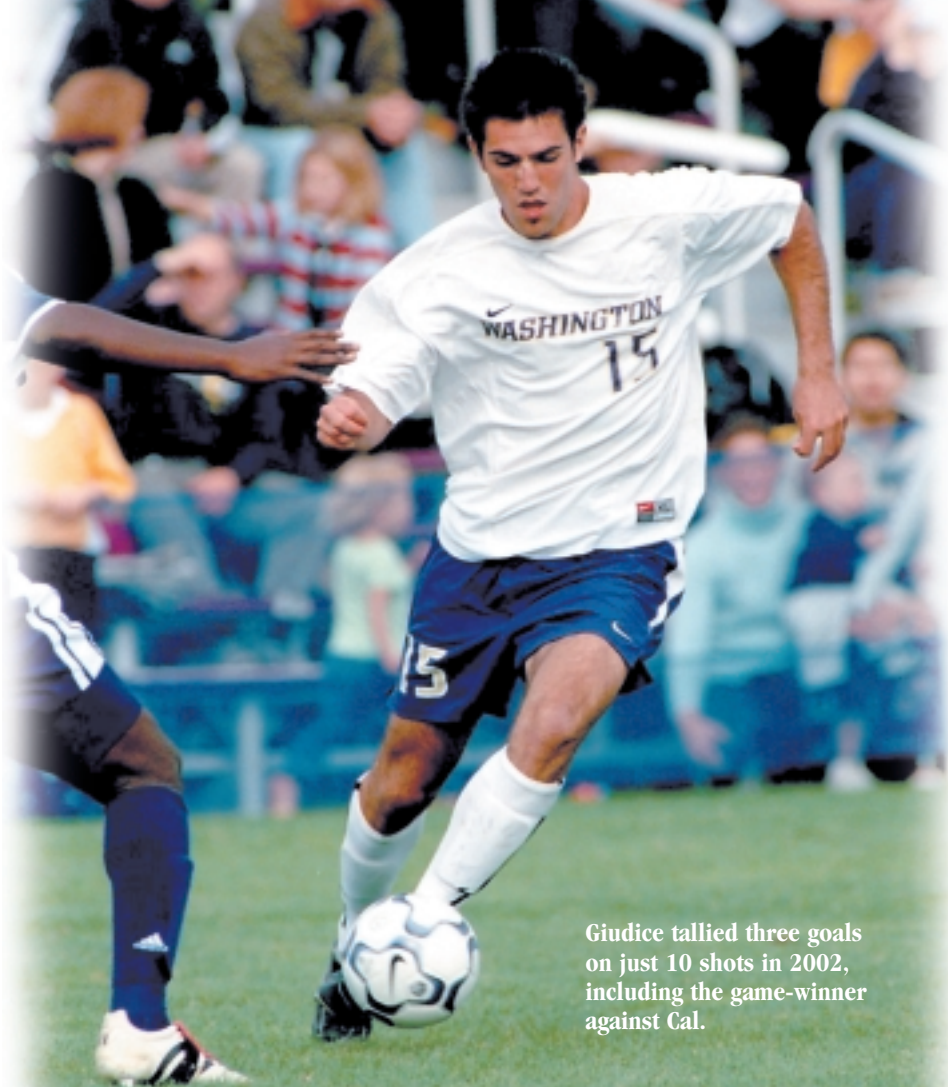

“I thought the weather up here was going to be bad, raining 60 days straight and such,” he says. “Then this last year it didn’t even rain! I brought an umbrella to class four times all year. I think it’s a myth, but I like it because it keeps people away, so we have it all to ourselves.”

It may have just seemed that every day was gray and dismal last fall, as the Huskies struggled through the nation’s most difficult schedule. A dramatic victory over a talented Cal team, though, at least gave Giudice something to crow about to his friends from the Sunshine State.

“I scored the game-winning goal with three seconds left in double overtime on a header off a corner kick from Mike Chabala,” Giudice recalls. “I have a lot of friends on that team, and if they would have beaten us that night they would have won the Pac-10.”

This season it’s the Huskies who hope to be contending for the conference title late in the season, though they will be entering the fray again with a mostly young team. One of just four seniors on the roster, Giudice wants to be a leader on the field, and take full advantage of his remarkably accurate shooting touch.

“Usually when I get a shot I’ll probably score it,” he says. “It’s on the seniors to carry this team this season, so I want to lead by example and score more goals. To win, though, we’ll have to play defense. Scoring goals can help you win games, but to win consistently enough to earn a championship you need to be

Giudice also hopes his experience can help the team’s freshmen make smooth transitions from high school to the more strenuous college game, where cramping and fatigue are commonplace for even the most highly-conditioned athlete.

“It’s hard being a freshman; it takes a year for most players to adapt,” says Giudice, who battled through ankle injuries in high school. “When I got to college I learned that I had to play through amounts of pain that I never would have played through before. The college game is so much more fast-paced.”

Although entering his final collegiate season, Giudice does not consider this year as the lime-light of his soccer career. After graduating, the communications major is focused on playing professionally, and with the enormous worldwide popularity of the game, Giudice can see himself giving defenders fits in a variety of exotic locales.

“Soccer is played on six continents, maybe even seven — people in Antarctica are probably down there playing!” he says with a laugh. “Why wouldn’t you want to play pro, even if you didn’t get paid much? I would love to learn a language, see another culture. I’d learn more from that than if I just sit here in my little bubble and relied on others to tell me what’s going on in the world.”

After all, the weather was great in Seattle. This much hype, at least, is true — Sean Giudice is a scoring force to be reckoned with.
